

SELECT MISCELLANY

CAUGHT IN HIS OWN TRAP

Matters have come to a crisis between a myself and landlady. My bill was daily in arrears and Mrs. Bigwood, having passed from friends to words, and from words to family, had called with a pre-emptory demand of payment.

Not being ready or having the ready-to-comply with her demand, I had nothing for it but to vacate my room and surrender my keys; the former being wanted, I was given to understand for Mrs. O'Connell's old customer of Mrs. Bigwood's who she was under a standing promise to accommodate, and whose arrival was hourly expected.

What a bungling set of fellows these detectives are! said the gentleman, whose tone left it doubtful whether he spoke of himself or of the police. "Why," he continued, answering my look, "here's that bank robbery, nearly a week old; yet with every clue to guide them, and the status of a handsome reward besides, those who should have been hot on the scent within an hour, are still in the moon."

"You were a detective once?" I ventured to surmise. "I nodded. "This reward—is it very large?" I asked. "Five thousand dollars," he answered. "For the recovery of the property and capture of the thief?" "Would be a quick way to make money," said I, "if one knew how to do it."

"I had set out in the road to fortune, but it looked like a shorter cut at starting. At any rate, my circumstances were desperate, and I saw no better chance to mend them. "I accept your offer," I said. "Come along," said the stranger, rising, and having settled our scores, we left the place together. In the street he took my hand, and after a long walk through unfrequented bystreets, my companion called a half before a sober looking house, into which he led me with a latch key. He led the way up stairs to a shabby furnished apartment, in which a dim light was burning.

"We seated ourselves, and my companion was beginning to unfold his plans, when a knock was heard at the door. "Excuse me a moment," said my companion, stepping out and closing the door. I heard low and earnest voices in the passage, but only distinguished the words, "Train for Boston at ten—San Francisco train at half past eleven."

He went on to say that he had a single section of which he had taken for himself, and discovered the object of his search in the hands of the officers recognized an old acquaintance. In his possession was found all the stolen money and securities, except these he had turned in my hands.

"I was formerly detained till next morning, when Mrs. Bigwood called several of the boarders, the former my little delinquency toward her, and gave me good advice, and I moved to the city on the night of the robbery, that I was discharged on the spot, and I was given five hundred dollars, quite courting the Muses—who but a Mormon would think of paying attention to a man who had been charged by Young, fraudulently, that can be recalled to mind now."

go back of what seemed to be a common pure record of discharged when things got to the point where the man under consideration belonged. The former had the means of knowing in every case the exact amount of each man whom he discharged was entitled, having these things in my hands.
