HISTORY OF THE BEAVER VAL LEY.

Correspondence of the Pittsburgh Gazette.

BEAVER VALLEY, Dec., 1872. [Paper No. 6.] BEAVER AS IT IS.

Beaver now contains a population of about 1,200 souls, of as industrious, moral and temperate people as can be found in Western Pennsylvania. The location cannot be surpassed, either scenery, or in its healthfulness. It is loeated on an elevated plateau, abruptly rising from the Ohio river and running to the foot of the hills behind it—while by a gradual slope, it descends to the waters of the Beaver on the east. The buff fronting the Obio, places the town high above the water level and relieves it largely from the dense fogs common to river towns, and the miasmatic influences that might form from the ponds beneath its feet. Its elevation gives it a commanding position at the mouth of the Beaver Vailey, enabling its denizens to overlook t) a certain extent in front, and to the left a vast expanse of country, covered by the beautiful towns which nestle at the base of the hills, or crown their summits and are partially hidden amid the trees and shrubbery, so lavishly bestowed by the hand of Nature. The river view from Beaver is as beautiful a picture as man may wish to witness. Its varied landscape; its gently sloping hills and the perfect combination of the picturesque and beautiful, presented, is a scene not soon to be forgotten. The famed and well heralded charms of the Hudson river scenery, as partially given in our Aldine and Pic turesque America, do not often surpass that afforded by an up river

VIEW FROM BEAVER. It is really worth immortalizing on canvas and it seems to me that a few dollars spent by the "solid" men of Beaver in such an enterprize, would do more to give their home city a favorable place among the outside people, than any other possible enterprise. Beside the varied scenery of hill and vale, four charming towns are in the view from Beaver. Just across the Ohio, is seen the pretty little form the background. It is elevated above the river, and forms of itself a delightful view, as it seems to gradually fade away into, and become a part of the hills on either side. Away beyond up the river, partially hidden by the turn of the river, is Freedom, with its cozy homes and pleasant slopes, supplemented by a busy industry at the boat yards. Below it, lies the thriving town of Rochester, its river bank covered with manufactories, marts of trade and all the implements and arts of a busy life, while gently sloping back from the river is the hill, on which is located some of the loveliest homes in the valley. Adorning the slopes are the churches with their spires pointing heavenward, and the ivy-grown buildings which tell us of the peace that reigns within its borders. Lying side by side with Beaver on the east, is the pleasant town of Bridgewater with its pleasant homes and surroundings. These, with the river lazily gliding by them, and in its serpentine course washing the shores by each town, and wearing away the green banks by a ceaseless attrition—floating or its broad bosom the hundreds of boats carrying the wealth of commerce—together with the grand old hills on either side, some rising to a height where they frown. ingly look down upon the busy people beneath, and others with just enough ascent to give them the name and place of hills, may all be seen in one view from Beaver, forming a scene of transcendent loveliness that no pen can describe, as it presents itself to the mind of one who loves the beautiful in nature and art.

Immediately fronting Beaver across the Ohio, are some very formidable looking hills, that hide from view the fine country lying behind them.

Forming the rear of the town is a succession of sloping bluffs, gradually rising to a respectable height and extending into the country beyond.

From the river bank to the base of these bluffs, is probably about one-half or three-fourths of a mile, the intervening grounds being as level as a prairie. The flat extends probably about three miles down the Ohio, every foot of it being adapted for building purposes. BEAVER'S THOROUGHFARES.

The main street of the town runs parhad been formed and brought to life in lined with structures that will ornament the day dreams of the lads and lasses o' her natural beauty and be of utility in staid old Beaver town. At the upper end | business uses.

of town there is a fine grove of trees, making a rural scene of surpassing interest. On the main street is a well located public ground or Diamond, comprising about ten acres of ground. This is divided into four equal parts, set apart for the public buildings of the town. Upon one of these squares is located the Court House buildings. The Court House proper, is about eighty by sixty feet, built of brick and a very respectable structure. It does not present quite as in point of picturesque and charming imposing an architectural appearance as Beaver rightfully deserves, but taken all in all, it will compare favorably with our sister county seats, and is very well calculated to meet all the requirements of justice.

THE FAIR GROUNDS.

In the eastern part of the town fronting bluff ascending from Bridgewater, are located the grounds set apart for fair purposes The grounds have an excellent situation, and so far as the natural is concerned, nothing better could be wished. But not so much can be said of the works of art, after making all liberal allowances. The grounds are well laid out, but as a general statement, the buildings do not correspond. They have about served their day. If no funds are available for the erection of new ones, certainly some of the old ones might be treated to a coat of paint, and others removed from the grounds. Beaver is not up to the requirements of the age in this regard and should wake up, make it a place of beauty and attractiveness, gentlemen mana-

BUSINESS OF BEAVER. In a business point of view, Beaver 19, of course, behind the other towns of our valley. It has no facilities for manufacturing, and is consequently so much deprived of a means of greater prosperity. There are 18 stores of various kinds; 2 drug stores; 3 confectioneries; and the usual amount of small business done. So far as the busy hum of industry goes, Beaver is rather quiet and to a great many people, who are accustomed to the noise and machinery and the ceaseless clatter of hammers, it is a dull place The learned professions, are, however, well represented, and perhaps, may atone for town of Phillipsburg, looking so like a the lack of muscular activity. There are fairy city as it is dwindled into compara. 5 physicians, being 1 for each 240 people; tive smallness, by the hugh hills that no more needed. For the administration of justice, we have 12 lawyers, ready at all times for clients; of ministers, she can boast the goodly number of 15, some, however on the retired list. It is for this circumstance, probably, that the town is sometimes dubbed "Saints' Rest," by certain ones who are of an irreverent furn of mind. Be that true or not, the town would deserve the name for the reason that it is deeply rooted and grounded in morality. Not a grog shop does or could exist in its midst, because of the

It has three churches, the United Pres byterian, Old School Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal. The ministers in charge of them are gentlemen of fine culture, and strongly marked religious habits and thought. Of course they are prosperous, and their evidence of it is in large membership and the general morality of

The general character of the residences of the town is not of a peculiarly high one. It is true that there are some fine dwellings in the town. Without intending to underrate any others, I must notice those of Col. Quay and J. Weyand, Esq. The residence of the first is undoubtedly the finest building in Beaver county in every respect. It is a beautiful architectural work, symmetrical in every part and at the same time a commodious, comfortable house. It is an excellent model of modern architecture for others, and Beaver ought to imitate it on every large lot. Mr. Weyand's house does not present so fine an appearance, but yet is a fine looking house, and is a commendable addition to the real attractions of the town. There are others, but space and time forbid their mention. There are a land. great many neat structures, cosy and comfortable. Occasionally we notice one that seemingly is of modern origin, with its bright appearance and clean front, yet lacking modern conveniences. Sometimes they look as if they were cramped allel with, and, about forty rods back in their light dress, and an inspection from the river. It is a beautiful street, shows us an old weather-beaten fellow, of and by a little work, some expenditure of three score and nearly ten, built of logs time and money, and proper attention, and now covered with boards. Cover can be made one of the most beautiful that old house as you may, paint it and and attractive avenues in the valley. It | fresco it from top to base, and you cannot runs the full length of the town, is of hide the good old cheering warmth of the good width and presents a fine natural pioneer's house. It is a good deal like view. But the most handsome street in brother Jonathan dressed up in court the town, is that fronting on the bank of style, or certain Beaver lads who might the river. It is wide, extending to the be mentioned, who try to cover and hide edge of the bluff, and is ornamented with nature with a "tile" and dapper cane. A graceful parks of well shaped trees, form- true artist loves tumble down buildings ing a delightful retreat from the heat and land old time structure better than the dust of the more busy part of town. It is new, and takes pleasure in blending the used, especially by the younger people, new and the old. So it may be, that it is as a sort of summer resort. where "sweet better that the town should have these communion" may be held, and sweeter contrasts in dwellings-a sort of light and stories told, beneath the trees in the shade-forming a variety that would be cooling shade. Ah, if those trees could entirely destroyed, by the harmony and only talk, what plots and schemes would probable monotony of modern styles. be revealed—what populous cities of air But let the result be what it may, we eastle would be disclosed to view, that hope to see Beaver, especially Main street,

JOURNALISTIC.

We have three newspapers in the town. THE RADICAL is the representative of the Republican principles and is always politically right, and consequently enjoys a large patronage. The Argus, represented the late Liberal movement, and is now independent in politics, but in the course of time will naturally come back into the fold, and ardently support President Grant. The Conservative was the organ of the "straightout" Democrats in the late campaign. Each of the papers seems prosperous, which we hope may continue from year to year.

EDUCATIONAL.

Beaver is more widely known on account of its schools, than any other interest centered there. The town boasts an excellent public school building built of brick and about eighty feet equare. It is s credit to the good people who have put it up. There is also located, three institutions of learning of a higher grade, two of which are not at present in operation. They have each done a good service and ought now to be in running order. Last and largest and greatest on the list, however, is the "Beaver College and Musical Institute," and which is after all the most successful institute in the town.

Rev. R. T. Taylor, D. D., is now and has been for some years. President of the College. It is hardly necessary for your correspondent to mention the name of this gentleman, who is already known and honored wherever the College is known. Prof. Taylor teaches because he loves it, and hence his wonderful success. The great success of this institute is no doubt in a large part attributable to the unremitting efforts of Prof. Taylor and lady, and their constant devotion to duty and the interests of their pupils. Rev. M. Simpson, one of the Bishops of the M. E. Church and Rev. Dr. D. L. Dempsey, of Beaver, were among the first to call attention to the desirableness of Beaver as the location for an educational institution of a high grade. Among its early founders were such men as Hon. Daniel Agnew, one of the Supreme Judges of Pennsylvania, Rev. W. G. Taylor, of Phillipsburg Soldiers' Orphan School, Rev. J. Monroe and the Hon. Benj. Adams, of Beaver. In 1853 a charter was obtained for the school, under the name of Beaver Female Seminary, which title was changed in 1860 to Beaver Seminary and Institute, since which a department has been added for the education of young men. Rev. Sheridan Baker was the first Principal, followed at the expiration of three sessions by Samuel Davenport, A. M., who, after a like period was succeeded by the present principal, Rev. R. T. Taylor, D. D., a graduate of one of our New England Colleges, and a member of the Pittsburgh Conference of the M. E. Church. It is in every way, a school that can be recommended to all who wish a thorough education under competent teachers.

The probable FUTURE OF BEAVER is a subject that ought to engage the at tention of its citizens. In the town there are over 800 acres of land, exclusive of streets and alleys, every foot of which can be used for building purposes. Making liberal allowance for public buildings. parks, promenades, etc., there is capacity enough for a population of over 20,000 people. The approaches to it are goodrailroads extending in every directioneasily reached by steamers, and but one hour's ride from Pittsburgh. As Beaver Valley is destined to be eventually a great manufacturing centre, why may not Beaver become the home of the capitalist, the artisan and the gentleman of means who desires to educate children? Beaver ought to wake up. Ornament your town. Line those broad and beautiful streets Europe, and to reside within said limits of travel, with shade trees, and make it a place of beauty and thrift. Remove your dilapidated shanties, repair wherever repairing is needed. You men of capital, put Beaver College on a firm and sound financial basis, with endowments that shall make its term easy, and give the teachers a good living salary, and then put your solid shoulders under the Academy and Female Seminary, and give them new life. If Beaver does her duty, the day is not far distant when she can boast of being at the mouth of a valley famed all over this BEAVER.

A DES Moines, Iowa, reporter, can write up a trifling incident of western life in as good a style as those New York fellows. Hear him: "In Buffalo, Scott county, at a New Year's party where they had been takin' suthin,' a man asserted that he could whip anybody in the room. When he found himself lying on his back, and saw his antagonist complacently chewing the end of the nose he had colored with so much care and expense, he began to suspect he had slightly overrated his powers."

THE celebrated Henderson, the actor, was seldom known to be in a passion. When at Oxford he was one day debating with a fellow student, who, not keeping his temper, threw a glass of wine in his face. Mr. Henderson took out his handkerchief, wiped his face, and coolly said 'That, sir, was a digression; now for the
