Correspondence of the Pitteburgh Gazette. BEAVER VALLEY, April, 1873. [Paper No. 9.]

ROCHESTER. Rochester is the youngest town in Beaver Valley, having its existence as a is not connected with any of the early incidents, for which its neighbors are famous. It is singular why it was overlooked so long, and why it was not the first river town at the mouth of the Beaver. In every point it is superior as a place for business, to either Bridgewater or Beaver, having an unlimited capacity for whariage and advantageous locations for manufactories and business houses. Its life has been an exciting one. fully as much so as any other settlement in the Beaver Valley. No western town ever saw more exciting land speculations or wilder financial undertakings, than have been here wittnessed. Although the history of the town does not run back into that of the aboriginals, or to that of the pioneers who first laid claim to the lands in and around it; yet many scenes of interest have transpired on the soil and made it memorable and of interest to those who have been permitted to hear the stories and thrilling adventures of the good old fathers.

The "Academy Outlots" were located in a portion of what is now Rochester, running to its lower or eastern boundary. Connected with these outlots, there is much that is very interesting, but it is now too late to gather any creditable account of the events that transpired back at that time. The fathers are gone, and with them has been lost a great deal of valuable reminiscences. Tradition gives us something once in a while, but too unreliable and uncertain to relate here. The town was a part of New Sewickly township until the year 1832. During the period preceding that date, there were built on the flat and steppes forming the present borough, about twenty houses at the time the first lots were surveyed and run off. Some boat building was done by Samuel Moore as early as 1825. The family of Moores were among the earliest settlers in Beaver Valley, and this gentleman constructed keelboats for use on the lower waters, doing a fair business at that time. This would seem to be the first industry in Rochester, or its present limits, and the adaptability of the location, and the advantages of the business for the place, were early recognized. Boat building was carried on at a much earlier period on the Beaver above Rochester, probably on account of there being plenty of timber.

The bridge connecting Bridgewater and Rochester was built as early as the year 1814, being a very cheap structure, supported by uprights for piers. It served its purpose and day, however, and met the wants of the people at that time. It was blown down after a while and re. placed by one which has a better apspearance and more capacity for endur-

"THE OLDEST INHABITANT."

The town of Rochester came into exsetence in the year 1832. The first lots said out on the river seem to have been during that year, by J. A. Sholes, Esq. who is yet residing in a house located on one of the lots. The number of lots comprised all of one half of one of the outdots, being about four acres. These lots are located on the river bank, not far from where the wharf is built. About this time a saw mill was erected by Mr. Lukens, which was followed not longer after by the car factory, a very extensive building, and which has since been in use as a plew factory. Dating from this period, was the commencement of the manufacturing interests of the town-Another boat yard was put in operation and run for some years. The town now had two good boat yards, in successful operation, doing business to their full capacity. During that time, and for some time afterwards, the business was a very extensive one, and brought some degree of prosperity to the people. Business became more active, and a bright future was opening 'up before the town. Commerce was now being attracted to the place, and in 1834 the first boat landed on its shores and opened a new and continuously increasing business. The boat was named New Castle, probably after the town of that name, on the canal recently built, at the head of the Beaver river, and with which a large trade sprung up. Warehouses were now the order of the day, and the first one was a small building set on the bank by Mr. Sholes in front of his residence.

THE "BOATING" TRADE.

Boating became now a thriving business-hundreds of boats yearly passing up and down the river, and landing at Rochester. A report made by the Cincinnati Board of Trade prior to 1850, shows that 233 different rteamboats annually passed up or down the Ohio river, in their trips for Pittsburgh to the lower ports and return, and necessarily all must pass Rochester, any of which could be hailed and made use of for commerce. Of course thousands of trips in all were made by these boats, hundreds of which landed, and received and landed their cargoes. It had become an immense business in the course of a few years, giving employment to scores of persons. and adding very much to the progress of the town. The opening of the canal sunning to Erie, and connecting with with the body by means of the collar other points, created a large and growing trade in this direction. Good outlots were established, by which the town had access to the outer world, and soon became a very prominent point.

In 1835 and 1836, a great impulse was given to the town by the operations of Mr. Ovid Pinney, a gentleman who owned largely of the property of the town, and town only about forty years. . Its history had an interest in making it successful. Hundreds of acres of ground were laid throughout the country. All available property was bought up, and then the greatest efforts were put forth to show. the excellent advantages, &c., for the purpose of building up the town. Beaver Valley has never witnessed another such excitement as was thus created. Property ran up to the highest possible pitch, and men became rich-or poor-in a day. This was pushed to the greatest extent, and the property fell into the hands of a New York company. Of course, this state of affairs could not last a great while, and after a time the bubble burst and Rochester assumed a more established base. Strange incidents are narrated in connection with this great speculation, but they should not find place in these letters. The excitement is referred to merely as a historical fact. Other points were, more or less affected also, and property sold for unprecedented sums. Rochester became a borough in the year 1859, and started as such with an established reputation as a good business point. During the same year, the present wharf was built for the accommodation of the river traffic. Improvements became much more rapid, and means for the extension of business were made use of. In 1853, the Pittsburgh Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad was completed through the town, which opened up a new field for its enterprise and added very largely to the business prospects and interests of the town. BOCHESTER'S OUTLOOK FOR THE FUTURE.

In 1856 the Pittsnurgh & Cleveland Railroad was opened for business and opened another scope of country for the entrance of Rochester's business interests. Shortly afterward the road to Erie was also opened, thus giving to the town the outlet by river and rail to Pittsburgh; the river outlet to the lower ports; one railroad leading to the granaries and pasture fields of the great West, and two lines of railroad and two or three canals leading to the great lakes of the north-west. It is not a difficult matter to see what a vast field was here opened up, for the advancement of the material interests of Rochester, and the building up of a large city. With such avenues of trade opened up to her doors, and such a variety of interests presented for the use of the citizens of the borough, is it any wonder that her citizens dreamed and talked of commercial greatness and financial power? It would seem to the observer that the immense trade on the roads leading to the great West were enough to give business prominence to any place of moderate energy. Under the stimulus of the fields of commercial fertility thus placed within the reach of Rochester, it soon became quite a forwarding point. All these roads and canals necessarily touch. ed the town, and from all points of the to the port and stations within its limits: in the description. Merchandise of all kinds found here a place from which it could be shipped to all parts of Beaver county and parts of Butler. In the improvement of its business interests, rapid strides had also been made in building and improving the appearance of the town. The rapid improvements made in the other valley towns had given an impetus to those of Rochester, which, as a matter of course, did not desire to be outdone by its neighbors and rivals. Direct connection was opened between Rochester and the part of the country on the opposite side of the river by a good steam ferry, which was another important addition to the town in the way of directing a large trade from that side of the river, and a considerable travel on the part of the citi-

Many industries of various kinds were finding a good, substantial footing and remunerative employment was given to scores of workmen, whose cosy little homes soon began to dot the hill sides, and vie with more costly dwellings, in their surroundings of natural beauty. The whole town was alive with the ceaseless activity on the part of the citizens. and every one pronounced it the home of thrift and energy. Attention was being paid to the moral and intellectual wants of the people and every effort was put forth to make the status of the people inferior to none anywhere.

Perils of Sabmarine Diving

Probably no calling necessitates more personal risk than that of the diver. Out of the number of professional divers in the United States, in all thirty or thereabouts, the average yearly mortality is four, though so large a percentage is due more to the recklessness of the men in the face of danger to which they become inured than to a mere accident. The armor consists of body, collar piece, helmet and shoes. The body is composed of one thickness of rubber between two of cloth, and covers the man from his neck to his heels, being closely strapped into the shoes at the bottom, and snugly held about the wrist by rubber cuffs. The helmet looks very much like an immense copper pot, and when put on is connected ders and is fastened to the helmet and the body by thumb screws, rendering it perfectly air-tight. There are glasses at the front and sides of the helmet, the piece in front being constructed to open. This is never closed until the man is ready to descend, when it is tightly screwed up, and from that moment the air pump must never cease working even for a single instant, lest the diver suffocate.

The air forced to him from above out in lots and extensively advertised reaches him by means of a rubber passing under his left arm, connects with the back of the helmet, the air passing over his head and down in front of his face. The foul air escapes through a small valve in the back of the helmet, and the rapidity with which it goes is regulated by preference of the man in the dress. The shoes are soled with an inch or two of lead, and over the shoulders, slung by cords, are two enormous leaden plates, one on the back and one on the breast, thus giving the diver sufficient weight to descend. A life line is fastened about his waist, by means of which he communicates his wants to those above. One pull of the line signifies more air is needed, two that the pumps are sending him too much and he is liable to float up, and three pulls indicate that he desires to be hauled to the surface. The greatest danger to a diver is, that he may get his air pipe entangled in something, and thus stop his supply of air. A man could not live two minutes should this happen. He usually descends with the hose in one hand and signal in the other, taking good care that these articles remain at a safe distance from any projection of rock or any portion of the wreck he is working upon, before he dares to let go of them to use his hands.

POSTAL CARDS.

The Postmaster General has given notice that the necessary appropriation having been made for the purpose, the Department will, on the first of May next, commence the issue to postmasters of the postal cards authorized by the act of June

The card adopted is five and one-eighth inches in length and three inches in width, and is made of good, stiff paper, watermarked with the initials, "U. S. P. O. D." in monogram. The face of the cards is engraved, surrounded by a border in scroll work, one eighth of an inch in width. The one cent stamp printed on the upper right hand corner, is from a profile bust of the Goddess of Liberty: looking to the left, and surrounded by a lath work border, with the words, "U. S. Postage" inscribed above, and "one cent" below. On the upper left hand corner are the words, "United States Postal Card," with the directions to "write the address only on this side, the message on the other." Underneath, and occupying the lower half of the cards, are ruled lines, on which to write the address, the top line being prefixed with the work "To.-" The back of the card, intended for the communication, is entirely aplain, being devoid of even ruled lines. In color the body of the card is light cream, the printing velvet brown. No variation in shape, size, color, or an other particular will be made from the regular style to accommodate special cases; nor will the Department do any printing on country goods could be shipped directly the card beyond the engraving specified

> Postal cards will be sold for one cent each, neither more or less, whether in large quantities or small. The object of the postal cards is so facilitate letter correspondence and previde for the transmission through the mails, at a reduced rate of postage of short communications either printed or written in pencil or ink. They may therefore be used for orders, invitations, receipts, acknowledgements and other requirements of business and social life, and the matdesired to be convened may be either in writing or in print, or partially in both In their treatment as mail matter they are to be regarded by the postmasters the same as sealed letters, and not as printed matter, except that in no case will unclaimed cards be sent to the Dead Letter Office.

An ordinary printed business card may be sent through the mails when prepaid by a one cent postage stamp attached; but such carde must contain absolutely no printed matter except the address, otherwise it will be treated as not fully prepaid, and refused admission into the

All cards different from those herein described, bearing embossed or printed postage stamps, and purporting to be United States postal cards, are counterfeit, and the manufacture of such cards or the attempt to use the same will subject the offender to a fine of $500 and imprisonment for five years. (Sec. 178, Pos-

Postmasters will not, under any circumstances, be permitted to reduce or exchange postal cards that may be misdirected, spoiled in printing, or otherwise rendered unfit for use in the hands of private holders. The Department will not furnish less than five hundred cards on the order of a postmaster. Individuals desiring postal cards will purchase them of a postmaster, as in no case can they obtain them upon their application to the Department.
