Bpiscopal-Services 1st and 3d Sundays at 10.30 R. E. & H. HOOPES lished at Cologne a somewhat carious in-first sight-oh, what a fall is there, my countrymen. No half measure, I tell you.

Before we had been speeding through the wintry landscape an hour, I had already built up several blocks of chateaux d' Eepagne, in my mind. I saw my bachelor rooms brightened with her presence. Islancied myself walking to church with her hand on my arm.

I heard her dulcet voice saying, "My dear Thomas, what would you like for upper, to-night?" I beheld myself a re spectable member of society-the head of s family.

What would Bob Carter say now-I meant then?

Bob who was always railing me on my state of hopeless old bachelorbood; who supposed, forsooth, because he happenedto be a trifle younger and better-looking than myself that I had no chances whatever.

I'd show Bob!

"What did we talk about ?" The weather, of course; the scenery, the prospects-all the available topics, one after another; and the more we talked, the deeper grew my admiration. She was so sensible, and so original, and so everything else, that she ought to be! I discovered that she preferred a town life to the seclusion of a country residence-so did I. Who would stagnate when he could feel the world's pulses as they throbbed ?

She loved the opera-so did I. She thought this woman's suffrage movement all ridiculous-with a bewitching little lisp on the last syllable-I agreed with ber.

She though a woman's true sphere was home : my feelings surged up too strongly for utterance, and I merely bowed my assent

Here was a delicious unaffimity of soul -a mute concord of sympathy.

What would Bob Carter say when he saw this beautiful little robin lured into my cage. How I would lord it over him How I would invite him to "happen in anytime." How I would figuratively; of course-hold up Mrs. Thomas Smith over his envying eyes. I uttered an audible chuckle as I thought of these things which I had some difficulty in changing into a cough,

"You have got a cold," said the widow, sympathetically. "Do, please, have one of my troches; they are very soothing to the throat.

"Dear, dear !" twittered my companion; "that's very bad, indeed." "Of course, he will pay a good deal of > attention to you, if you are to be his sister's guest," I pursued ; "but it won't do to encourage him."

""No!" "By no means. He is a professional flirt." "Is it possible ?" lisped the widow.

And I mentally shook hands with myself for having thus defily put a spoke in Bob's wheel. First impressions are everything, and I certainly had been beforehand with the pretty widow. Neither had I any compunctions of conscience, for hadn't Bob been playing practical jokes of all styles and complexions on me ever since we had entered the bar side by side ? "Stupid Tom," had been his pet name for me, always; but this wasn't so very "stupid" a game, after all.

While I was thus metaphorically hugging myself, the conductor bawled out, "Glendale," and I eprang up to assist my lovely companion out of the car, cheerfully burdening myself with bags, baskets, paratols, and bulky wraps.

As we stepped upon the platform, I nearly tumbled into the arms of-Bob Carter.

"Hullo, Tom !" was his inelegant greet ing. "Yon don't grow any lighter as you grow older."

I was about to retort pitterly, when a sudden change came over his face, as he beheld the pretty widow behind me. "Gertie !" he exclaimed, clasping both her hands in his. "Yes, Robert," she answered, with sparkling eyey and flushed cheeks. "That gentleman has got my parcels; he has been very kind to me."

"Oh, has he, though ? well, we won't trouble him any further. I am much obliged to you, Tom, and we'll send you cards to the wedding."

"To what wedding ?" I gasped. "Didn't you tell him Gertie?" "Why to our wedding, the tenth of next month, to be sure. Au revior ! Tom, be careful of yourself for my sakc."

And that was the last I ever saw of my daisy faced widow! For if you think I was mean-spirited enough to go to that wedding, you are mistaken in my character.

-We are governed more by influence than circumstances.

-They who presume most in prosperi-I took the troche, but I did not swallow ty are soonest subject to despaire in adquiry concerning the age of the earth, in which he severely criticises the attempts of the geologists to compute the length of time required for certain formations. Thus Biddell calculates the age of the Mississippi Delta from the amount of the present yearly deposit, to be four hundred thousand years. Lyell, the receding of the Niagara Falls from Kingston to their present site, to be thirty-five thousand years, and Bischof the time for the formation of coal to be nine millions of years. But all these and numerous other similar calculations have, Dr. Klein thinks, this fault, that they are all based upon present conditions and experiments on a small scale, from which conclusions are drawn to det rmine general developments of the most gigantic dimensions. Professor Fleck has completed an elaborate investigation in regard to the manner in which arsenic is disseminated by wall paper colored with pigments containing it. It has long been known that particles of Schweinfurth green may be suspended like dust in the air of the room, and thus enter the lungs. But it is said that a gas is also produced containing arsenic, and the Professor has endeavored, bo numerous experiments, to show how such a gas may be generated. Schweinfurth green, taken as a type of arsenic colors, contains, in addition to arsenite and acetate of copper, more or less free arsenious acid. Organic matter and moisture act upon this tree acid so as to produce arsenietted hydrogen, and this is more especially the case when gelatinous substances are used to fasten the paper to the wall. Analine dyes containing arsenic may act in a similar manner.

A scientific writer has recently collated a group of facts illustrative of the effect of oscillation of powerful bodies when not frequently broken by vibration. In crossing large suspension bridges it is esteemed necessary that processions should break step in order to insure safety; and it is told, in illustration, that when the first suspension bridge was building in England a fiddler offered to demolish it with his fiddle. Striking one note after another, he eventually hit the vibrating, note or fundamental tone, and threw the structure into extraordinary vibrations. Only recently a brilge went down in France under the tread of a regiment of infantry, who neglected to break step on entering it. Three hundred persons were drowned. The experiment of breaking a tumbler or other small glass vessel by frequent repetitions of some particular note of the human voice belongs to the same class of phe-voice belongs to the same class of pheiment of breaking a tumbler or other
