"Do not think of me. I can live as have done since father died. But, Jess and Mrs. Markham's face looked gre and sad, "there's one view of the mat you do not take."

"I dare say there are fifty. Reme ber we have now had only an hour two to think, since the letter came from the lawyer. But what is the view y mean ?"

"Charlie." "Charlie?"

Jessie's large brown eyes were open to their widest extent as she repeated name, adding:

"Why, I haven't thought of anythi but Charlie!"

"But-I mean-dear me?" said mother, shrinking from uttering her o thoughts. "You know, dear, you ha always been considered your aunt's heiress; a man of wealth he became actually poor, and losing energy and hope, he came with ing the practice of his profession. It may, Jessie to share our home. Stanley Horton, the man we all supposed to be a devoted lover, was fully aware of the change in Jessie's prospects, yet he continued his visits, making no abrupt, ungentlemanly desertion of his betrothed. Yet we, who watched her with the jealousy of affection, soon discovered a change in her. She became pale and sad, often tearful, till finally she confided to me that Stanley was evidently weary of her. and had ceased to love her. Even then she attributed the change to some defect in herself, not seeing the mercenary motive till later, when time had taken the glamour from her eyes and heart. She gave him back his ring and promises. thus accepting the position his unmanly conduct had forced upon her; of herself breaking the engagement between them. The first love of her life was the last. She was your grandfather's comfort until he died, and then went to keep house for Hoyt, who lost his wife and baby one year after his wedding-day. When he died he left her the house and money. and she lived there till she died. Still I know she loved you, and I am quite sure her will is not designed so much to keep you single as it is to win the disinterested love of your future husband.' There was a long silence after Mrs. Markham concluded her story, and Jessie allowed her head to rest in her mother's lap, under her caressing hand trying to picture a future of easy competency shared by the companion of her life. and Charlie is young, and only commencbe that he will-"

"Be false to me for the sake of money?" interrupted Jessie, with the rosiest of cheeks and brightest of eyes. "We will soon test that," and she drew a writing table to her side. "I will send him a copy of the lawyer's letter, and"-here her voice and eyes softened-"the assurance that Aunt Jessie's will will make no difference to me."

. Mrs. Markham made no objection to this step, but after the letter was signed, sealed and dispatched to the village by Polly, the only servant of Mrs. Markham's household, she called Jessie again to her side.

Over the fair sweet face of the young girl there had crept a shade of gravity and perplexity since the arrival of the lawyer's letter, that clouded the brown eyes and gave the sensitive, mobile mouth a firmer pressure than was quite natural. Life had not been all sunshine for Jessie Markham, yet hers was one of those buoyant natures that find the silver lining for every cloud, and coax some sweetness from every bitter dose. Her father had been dead six years, and his business affairs having been complicated in some way not comprehensible to feminine intellects, his widow and child found themselves reduced to an income that barely covered the necessaries of life. They left the city, and took a small cottage in the small village of Merton, where Mrs. Markham soon procured a class of music scholars, and herself gave Jessie lessons in the higher branches of English studies, German, French and music, till, at eighteen, her daughter also procured a few pupils in languages. They were very happy in their mutual the cares of their little household.

It had been understood from the time Jessie was a tiny baby that she would inherit the fortune of her maiden aunt. for whom she was named, and who came from the city every summer to spend a ways bringing pretty presents to brighten the home of her brother's widow, and lavishing tenderest affection upon her heart. her neice.

Yet though Jessie herself had known of her sunt's supposed intentions, neither she nor her mother had ever made calculations upon a fortune dependent upon the death of the one for whom they felt the warmest affection, and the idea that others could be influenced and happiness for her yet. And then a bright face crowned with curly brown hair would come before her, and she knew that the handsome house nor the comfortable income could ever fill her affection, in the love of their pupils, and heart if Charlie left an aching void there.

Suddenly, like a gust of wind, there swept into the little sitting-room, a tall, broad shouldered young man, in a gray tweed suit and slouch hat, which latter article found a resting place upon the month or two in the little cottage, al. floor, as the young giant braced himself before Jessie in an attitude of grim defiance that sent thrills of glad music into

"Will you have the kindness, Miss Markham," said the intruder, towering in his six feet of manhood over Jessie's low seat, "to tell me what you mean by that absurd letter Polly handed me? Was it not fully understood that you and I were to share this cottage with your mamma until I attained sufficient legal by it was a new thought to the young eminence to warrant the purchase of a in the hands of a woman: therefore, you will find, dear Jessie, that half of my fortune only is yours, the remaining half to go to the husband who has proved that he loved you for your own sweet self, not for your fortune."

During the wedding tour of the young couple, Mrs. Markham, at their earnest solicitation, took an affectionate farewell of her pupils, and removed her household treasures to the New York mansion, to which, in due time, came Charlie and Jessie to brighten the long silent rooms with their happiness, and establish that loving circle that makes home out of any house, however grand, or however humble.
