

United States, of the first of June, as follows.

Resolved, that the bill entitled "an act declaring war against Great Britain and her dependencies, and the United States and their territories," be committed to the committee to whom was committed the message of the President of the first instant, with instructions to modify and amend the same in such a manner that the President of the United States shall have power to authorize the public armed ships and vessels of the United States to make reprisals upon the public and private ships and vessels, goods and merchandize, belonging to the crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or to the subjects thereof; and also to grant letters of marque and reprisal, under suitable regulations to be provided in the bill, to private armed ships and vessels, to make like reprisals."

The resolutions of ANDREW GREGG whose only motive and tendency we have already declared, and shall hereafter more particularly shew, was, on the day following, the eleventh of June, supported with all their zeal and all the force of every federalist in the senate, and for the moment prevailed against the known sense and determination of the democratic party.

On the 12th of June, the committee reported a bill agreeably to the instructions given in the resolutions of Mr Gregg, with a proposed amendment to its title, striking out the words "declaring war," and substituting the words "authorising reprisals." Upon the question being put, whether this bill should be adopted, with the proposed amendment to strike out, ANDREW GREGG, with fifteen others, all of whom were notorious Federalists, voted in favor of it, every sound democrat voting against it.

Another expedient to distract and baffl the republican party was shortly afterwards, on the fifteenth of June 1812, devised by another senator, Dr. MICHAEL LEIB, whose policies may well be compared with those of Mr. Gregg. His plan differed but little from his colleague's; but to shew his adoption of federal notions, his accordance with the vulgar federal clamor then raised against the democratic party, he had embodied in his project hostilities as well against France as Great Britain; and in favor of this improvement, we find Mr Gregg on that day recording his vote, conjointly with all the federalists. Nor was he satisfied with this liberal display of his opposition: for on the seventeenth day of June 1812, he submitted a motion re-modelling the idea of his friend Dr. Leib for issuing letters of marque and reprisal against France and England; and for this he obtained every federal vote, though it was finally and effectually put down by a republican majority.

In confirmation of the federalism of Mr Gregg, displayed in particular at one of the most striking, critical and trying epochs of our history, we intended to have added another proof; a document from under his own hand. But our allotted space for to day is more than exhausted, and the subject well deserves patient development and consideration. More anon.

The vote in favor of Jay's treaty, given by Mr Gregg in congress, in 1796, was considered by all parties as a decisive proof of his apostasy, and of his conversion to federalism. A reference to Cobbett's Political Censor, of that year, will shew that Andrew Gregg, the man who is now the federal candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, was then held up, even by that detestable British hireling, as an object for the admiration of all federalists, anglo-federalists and English partizans, because of his vote in favor of the British treaty! Cobbett said that M. Gregg was one of the new converts, and favorably distinguished, in publishing his name among those of other members, in giving the Jay treaty votes. Such a man as Andrew Gregg is therefore a fit candidate for the support of the federal party at the present time.

NARROW ESCAPE.

In the first attack of the French soldiers on the Fortress of St. Sebastian, the soldiers are said to have distinguished themselves to such a degree, that the Duke d'Angouleme distributed crosses of honor to them with his own hands. The Spaniards having observed him from their fort, ordered forward a 24 pounder, but they were so slow in mounting it that the Duke had time to leave the ground. When fired off, the ball passed through a house, and struck a platoon precisely where the Duke had been distributing his decorations, and killed and wounded fifteen men.

IRELAND

By the ship Cleaver, captain Pease, arrived yesterday from Londonderry, we have received the Derry Journal, ning Post, to the 16th of April.

The Dublin papers state that the work of destruction is still successfully carried on by General Rock and his men.

A great number of dwelling houses and out houses, with their contents, in the surrounding country, were destroyed. A Mr. C. Brouder and Mr. Cross had their premises fired, and the cause assigned by the general's men was, that they had taken farms over the heads of their former tenants, which was contrary to his new code of laws, and had produced the usual punishment, burning the premises.

Several fires were seen in the county of Cork.

Charleston, (S. C.) May 17.

By the brig Charles, we have received Mantanzas papers to the 10th inst inclusive. The trade of piracy begins to be one of much danger and little profit, since the establishment of convoys on the Cuba coast by Commodore Porter; and the constant cruising of his vessels on the north side of the Island, and that of the British on the southern side, will we hope completely finish the business of outwaid robbery and wanton murder.

From the Montrose (Penn.) Gazette

There appears to be a scarcity of wheat throughout this county; we have therefore to depend on the "Lanc county" for our flour. This is not as it should be, the fault is with the farmers. Too much attention has been paid to raising rye for the distilleries; and our prudent agriculturists must ere this have seen their mistake.
