Colic in the Horse.

This is one of the most common diseases to which the horse is subject. The name is commonly used to designate all abdominal affections characterized by pain and uneasiness, gripes, cramps, and other names are also applied to it, and a horse attacked with colic is very often said to have the bots. There are two kinds of colic, spasmodic and flatulent. In spasmodic colic there is spasmodic contractions of portions of the intestines, which occasions great pain; and in flatulent colic the large intestines are inflated, from which the horse's abdomen has a swollen appearance. A sharp line of division cannot, however, be drawn between spasmodic and flatulent colic as there is always more or less flatulence in cases of spasmodic colic.

CAUSES.—The custom of working horses immediately after being fed, and especially when long intervals between hours of feeding, weakens the digestive organs and predisposes animals to acts of colic. Very cold water given when a horse is fatigued and when he is cooling down, or rather has cooled down after severe exercise, may produce the disorder. Horses are frequently attacked with colic on coming into the stable after a journey, especially when they stand in the stable and become chilled and fatigued after exertion. New hay and oats frequently produce colic, and from our own observation we are of the opinion that horses fed on corn instead of oats are frequently attacked with flatulent colic.

SYMPTOMS.—The horse is uneasy and restless, paws and stamps on the ground with his feet, looks back at his flank, and then, as if the pain had become more severe, throws himself down and rolls on the ground; he gets up again with his body bedewed with sweat, and may remain free from pain for fifteen minutes or half an hour. When the horse urinates it is a favorable sign, and many consider that after this the horse is out of danger. He has frequently a succession of attacks such as those above mentioned, during which he suffers great pain. A horse's pulse in colic seldom rises above fifty beats per minute. In flatulent colic there is considerable swelling of the abdomen.

TREATMENT.—The horse should be placed in a box stall or in some other roomy place where he may roll about without injuring himself, or getting himself fixed in such a position that it will be difficult to extricate him from it. Then give an ounce of tincture of opium and an ounce of spirits of nitric ether in a pint of tepid water; the dose should be repeated in half an hour if relief is not obtained.

Lancing Horses.
The horse is one of the most powerful, ambitious and sensible of domestic animals, and yet, in a certain sense, is far from being a hardy one. In this respect the horse is not equal to the rough and tumble usage which the mule or even the ox can bear without exhibiting marked signs of the severe discipline to which they have been subjected.

In reviewing the many horses daily thronging the streets of the larger towns and cities, the number of defective ones can scarcely fail of being remarked. Some are ailing in the fore limbs, others in the hind ones, and not a few in both. This is not necessarily the result of age, defective blood, nor of special hard work, but in some instances it may be so, but more often is the consequence of careless handling or positive cruelty on the part of those to whom they are entrusted.

As has been already intimated, the horse, in a certain sense, is a delicate animal, and if pounced upon in a position well encumbered with harness, and possibly with a load too heavy for easy movement, the chances are that efforts to escape punishment will result in such overextension of the muscles as to produce permanent lameness.

Every one conversant with the rough and tumble work of the farm, the lumber forests, stone quarries, the docks and the like, will have encountered many difficulties in which teams and teamsters have tried their powers of endurance severely tried. Both become excited and fractious, and whatever the fault, if fault there be, the horse is likely to receive pretty severe treatment, if not permanent damage. Not a few horses are lamed under such circumstances, while others are injured by want of proper consideration on the part of those having them in charge—not from positive ill treatment, but by carelessness in placing the animals in such situations as to cause unwanted exertions to escape from unapprehended danger.

Rough, boorish men are not suited to the care of an animal having the spirit tenderness and susceptibility pertaining to the horse, and were such less frequently entrusted with the management of stable stock, there would be fewer limping and comparatively valueless horses in our public thoroughfares than there are at present. The greatest care, it is true, cannot prevent accidents to horses, in cases; but with proper attention the number of the halting ones would constitute the exception, and not the rule, as is now too often the case.

Turf, Field and Farm.
A correspondent of the Journal of Agriculture says that sweet oil administered to a horse with the bots will effect a cure.

How to Fatten Chickens.

We make the following extracts from an article on this subject in the London Cottage Gardener:

"It is hopeless to attempt to fatten them while they are at Liberty. They must be put in a proper coop; and this, like most other poultry appliances, need not be expensive. To fatten twelve fowls, a coop may be three feet long, eighteen inches high and eighteen inches deep, made entirely of bars. No part of it solid—neither top, sides nor bottom. Discretion must be used according to the sizes of the chickens put up. They do not want room; indeed, the closer they are the better—provided they can all stand up at the same time. Care must be taken to put up such as have been accustomed to be together, or they will fight. If one is quarrelsome, it is better to remove it at once, as, like other bad examples, it soon finds imitators. A diseased chicken should not be put up.

The food should be ground oats, and may either be put in a trough or on a flat board running along the front of the coop. It may be mixed with water or milk, the latter is better. It should be well soaked, forming a pulp as loose as can be, provided it does not run off the board. They must be well fed three or four times per day—the first time as soon after day-break as may be possible or convenient, and then at intervals of four hours. Each meal should be as much and no more than they can eat up clean. When they have done feeding the board should be wiped, and some gravel may be spread. It causes them to feed and thrive.

After a fortnight of this treatment you will have good fat fowls. If, however, there are but four or six to be fatted, they must not have as much room as though they were twelve. Nothing is easier than to allot them the proper space; as it is only necessary to have two or three pieces of wood to pass between the bars, and form a partition. This may also serve when fowls are up at different degrees of fatness. This requires attention, or fowls will not keep fat and healthy.

As soon as the fowl is sufficiently fattened it must be killed; otherwise it will still get fat, but it will lose flesh. If fowls are intended for the market, of course they are, or may be, all fatted at once; but if for home consumption it is better to put them up at such intervals as will suit the time when they will be required for the table.

When the time arrives for killing, whether they are meant for market or otherwise, they should be fasted without food or water for twelve or fifteen hours. This enables them to be kept for some time after being killed even in hot weather.
