The Price of Wheat.

At this season of the year, when the farmer is contemplating with some satisfaction his well-filed barn, the inquiry is not unnatural, "Will wheat go up or decline?" The agriculturist would be untrue to himself who did not carefully count the chances of a rise or fall before he made sale. Holding on for high prices, without sufficient calculation, has frequently proved a ruincus policy. A farmer has five hundred bushels of wheat to sell. At a dollar and a half a bushel he would receive seven hundred and fifty dolars. Suppose he took the chances of a rise or fall, and postponed sale for a year. Since these chances are equal, under ordinary circumstance it is clear that comparing one year with another nothing is made by withholding sale: on the contrary, much is lost. Wastage amounts to something; indeed, more than any farmer would willingly submit to co'd he measure it beforehand. It is not improbable that of the seven hundred and fifty dollars he would lose fifty by wastage alone. Again, there is a clear loss of the interest on his money for a year, which would be forty-five dollars. Add these two items together and we have a net loss of ninety five dollars or the interest on over fifteen hundred.

Any correct reasoning, then, which impels a farmer to hold on to his crop must involve these losses. Unless there is a certainty of such advances in prices as will overcome them, he should sell at once. And weighing the condition of things, is there a probability of any immediate rise in the price of wheat? Reports from all sections of the country furnish evidence of a bountiful crop. There will not only be enough to supply home demand, but sufficient for any reasonable foreign demand. It is hardly likely then that any home influence will operate to enhance prices unless the supply of corn falls short. There is some likelihood of this, judging from the decrease of acreage when compared with last year, Cloths, and taking into consideration the extent and severity of the late drought. But it is hardly probable that these causes will so increase the price of the latest and most fashionable styles, for wheat as to warrant a retention of it men or boys. Goods sold by the piece or by wheat as to warrant a retention of it in the garners. To do this the farmer line of must expect at the end of the year a price not far from one dollar and seyenty-five cents per bushel.

The effect of a foreign market, however, should not be overlooked. England is our largest purchaser of this cereal. She raises an average crop this year; we could not therefore expect to export more than we have done in former years. But Russia has heretofore given her a larger supply than the United States.

This year the Russian crop is short. England's supply from this source must then materially fall off, and in a corresponding degree the demand for American wheat will increase, We have here grounds for supposing that by reason of the scarcity in Europe the prices of wheat will advance. Any rise must, however, be slow and remote. The conclusion seems imperative, therefore, that steadiness will be the rule of the wheat market, with chances in favor of a rise in price. We cannot see how it can decline.-Phil a Press.

Manuring Meadows.

Although grass is said not to exhaust the soil, except slowly, there is abundant evidence for the belief that meadows must be manured occasionally. Mr. Plate a farmer of Pennsylvania, in giving his system of management, writes as follows:

"My land is adapted to all kinds of grain, and to timothy and red clover. before purchasing elsewhere; if you do not, My practice is, when I sow a piece to we are sure you will be sorry that you did grass, not to plow it again in less than eight years and I frequently let it lie | quality, a much longer time. I have a meadow now which has been mowed for sixteen successive years, and it never was better than now. In fact, my meadows, under the right treatment, grow bester as they grow older. I do it by returning to a meadow all the manure the hay made that was taken from it, and sowing a bushel of GOODS AT OLD FASHIONED PRICESgypsum per acre each year. In that way the yield of grass is heavier and finer and richer as the sod thickens.

I use manure only for top-dressing that they are daily receiving a large the meadows; in that way I get double price for it.
