

[From the Germantown Telegraph] CUTTING TIMBER FOR FENCING.

An Old Farmer's Experience.

There never will be much improvement in the plans, system or method of farming, or anything else, if we place implicit confidence, without investigation, in the opinion and practices of others, ancient or modern. Any man is liable sometimes to be mistaken; and espeeially, if this belief is grounded wholly, or in part on theory; or on the opinion of his father, or some other great man. If we try the thing several times with the same result, it will very much establish the fact of the truth or falsity of the matter in hand. "Experience is the best kind of knowledge that can be acquired."

According to my experience, the time that has been considered as the best for cutting tim-ber, where durability is required, is a mistake.

Hosiery—Gloves, Mitts, &c., &c. Carpet Bags, Traveling Baskets, Toys, Perfumery. That time was in the old of the moon in February, when it was said there was a smaller quantity of sap in the wood; than at any other time in the year. And they likewise held the idea that feuce posts ought to be seasoned before they were set in the ground.

I had posts made from the body of a large chestnut tree, that grew by itself; it was cut about the middle of April, made into posts, and put up without seasoning. They general-.ly stood about twenty years; at the end of thirty-four years the last of them were taken up, and were not then entirely rotten. Again, I cut a white oak in the beginning of May, when there was a full flow of sap; their general durability was seventeen years; and some of those made of the limbs, were taken up after they had stood twenty-two years, and were not yet rotten.

Agair, I cut another chestnut, and eighteen feet from the stump, I made a gate post of the body, peeled off the bark and planted it while yet green. The post has been standing since 1811, and it shows no sign of being rotten except a small hollow in the top of it. I cut another thrifty white-oak at the standard time in February, and planted the posts the spring following. The ground in which the fence was set, in all three cases, was alike. At the end of six years, from planting this last batch of posts, there were so many of them rotten as to be easily broken off even with the top of the ground. I have not been much in the practice of waiting for posts to season before they were used, though it sometimes happened; but the result was always in favor of the green posts.

When the sap is displaced by seasoning, all the cavities are filled with air, which when buried in the ground, become partially dislodged by water, producing a mixture very unfavoraa great length of time, as where logs have been ground, in low, swampy places, that in all probability have lain there many hundred years .-When posts are planted in a green state, the sup prevents in part the admission of the air, and hence their lasting longer. If timber is cut for rails, when the sap is running, the bark heating stoves for churches, offices, bar-rooms, stripped off and the rails made immediately, they will last one-fourth longer than if out at any other time and have the bark loft on. The inside bark, when it remains on the wood, is the first part to decay and rot, and being closely they will last one-fourth longer than if cut at first part to deeay and rot, and being closely connected with the sap of the wood, and being of a porous nature, contains air and water enough to carry the process of decay into the wood, when, if the bark is peeled off, the sap part of the wood dries in a short time, and in a great measure prevents decay.

I have noticed that posts made from the limbs and upper parts of the tree, always lasted the longest.

It is a bad plan to bank dirt up around the posts in setting fence, to turn the water off; as with all that can be done there will be moisture encugh left, in company with the air, to promote a speedy rotting. The air should as much as possible be excluded from the post, below the top of the ground; and to do this, make a hollow, or dish around each post, to catch the water, and the longer the water stands there the better for the post.
