Gens. Crook and Kelly.

On Tuesday morning, about two o'clock, a force of rebels, stated at one hundred and sixty, made a 11th Oct.; am a daughter of Fred. C. Mock; mother was dash into Cumberland, Md., and took Gens. Crook there and sister; three men in soldiers' clothes came across and Kelly prisoners. The rebels wore the U.S. the fence toward the house; another person was with blue over-coat. About fifty entered the town from the rence toward in soldiers' clothes on; they asked for the the direction of the New Creek road, our pickets James Lyon, Indictment for obstructing Highway. --- had gone to Burkstines'; they weat round and looked in having been cut off by a "flank" movement and at the windows; they had left their horses in the big road; captured. The rebels then coolly rode into the they called me a liar, when I told them he wasn't at town in small squads. Three or four of them rode home: they left and went down the road towards Alum up to the Barnum Hotel, and enquired of the senti-Bank; I went down to Mr. Griffith's: I went to go to my nel tor Gen. Kelly. The sentinel supposing them father's, and about the time I got to the middle of the to be Union scouts, gave the information that he buckwheat field they shot him, and seared me, and I went was there in his rooms. Upon turning to resume home: I heard the reports of the guns: there were four: I his beat he was seized and overpowered, and the could not see the flashes: they were pretty close together: General taken a prisoner in his room. A similar heard no scream; I didn't see the body until they fetch- mode was practiced at the Reveire House, the headquarters of Gen. Crooks, resulting in his capture. The rebels at once retreated in the direction of Rom ney. A detachment of cavalry was sent in pursuit after some delay; they came up with the retreating enemy during the day, (Tuesday,) and captured two or three of his men; but the U.S. officer (a Lieuten ant) in command, refused, as we hear, to allow his men to charge, and the enemy was permitted to coninue his retreat without further molestation that day There is said to have been a large force in and around Cumberland, variously stated at from five to ten thousand men. There were three companies of cavalry in the town. Besides the Generals, a number of privates were captured. These achievements of a handful of a vagrant enemy, in a populous city, in the presence of our army, looks had for us. To General Kelley and his friends the affair is peculiarly mortifying just now, if as rumor has it, the Gen N<sup>EW</sup> M eral was to have been married to a young lady of Cumberland the 6th of next month
