THE SOLDIERS WELCOME HOME.—A correspondent sends us the following report of the dinner which was served up at Waterside on last Friday:

Since the soldiers of South Woodbury have returned home, the ladies have been laboring to give them a welcome home dinner.

After all the necessary arrangements were made, it was announced that Friday, the 4th day of August, was the day chosen for this grand festival to take place. Waterside was the place designated for the people to congregate, and early in the morning the roads were filled with persons wending their way to the grove northeast of the village, where all the arrangements possible, had been made for their comfort.

In the morning, dark clouds gathered in the sky, and in a short time there was every indication of having a wet time of it. Groups could be seen starting out in every direction for the purpose of seeking shelter from the impending storm.

The storm soon passed by with little rain, when the martial music struck up, and soon the people were once more gathered together.

Soon after the people had assembled, a choir of beautiful young ladies took their place on the stand, who had been selected by a committee appointed for that purpose. From that time everything moved right along. When the speakers took the stand the following programme was announced:

- 1. Prayer by Rev. Cramer.
2. Singing by the choir. (America.)
3. Martial Music.
4. Address by Rev. Wm. B. Noble.
5. Martial Music.
6. Singing. (The Red White and Blue.)
7. Address by Mr. J. H. Longenecker.
8. Martial Music.
9. Singing. (The Prisoner's Hope.)
10. Address by Rev. Cramer.
11. Martial Music.
12. Singing. (E Pluribus Unum.)
13. Dinner.

I shall not attempt to describe the speaking or singing for it surpassed anything we have heard for some time, suffice it to say that it was exceedingly well done.

The soldiers, at the tap of the drum, formed in two ranks and marched to the table, finishing it groaning beneath the weight of the richest luxuries the world can afford.

After dinner was over, we were honored by more singing and had several toasts to which Rev. Cramer and D. Armstrong, Esq., responded in a very appropriate manner.

There was nothing to mar our pleasures until evening when some were caught in a rain storm.

Ladies and Gentlemen of South Woodbury, and others who have contributed on this occasion:

The soldiers take this opportunity of returning, through the writer, their sincere and heartfelt thanks for the esteem and kindness you have shown to the returned ones of our land. You have done nobly, for which we shall ever be grateful, and I may add, that while you were laboring for a good and just purpose, I am informed you met with some unpleasant reproaches. I am now speaking in behalf of the soliciting committee. While calling on some of our would-be friends, they were dared to offer the grossest insults to the ladies. Refusals of contributions were made upon various grounds, which I shall not relate, but let it be said to the eternal discredit of those who did so.

Poor miserable creatures, I cannot be reproached for the guilty know too well to whom the allusions are made. Do you see any thanks here for you? Oh, I entreat these scorpions to mend their ways, become friends of soldiers, resolve to support the government and after staying at home following the civil avocations of life during this rebellion: let them not grumble when tax collectors call to see them and if they are opposed to soldiers and all their undertakings, let them not speak their mind in public, for the soldiers, whose name is legion, will be sure of finding it out. We can never repay the kindness shown us by the patriotic and generous of this vicinity, while on the other hand, I am sorry to say, some have kindled a fire of hatred that will not be quenched in a few hours, just for the simple reason, that they refused to contribute and despised the idea of seeing the soldiers have one day of rejoicing after four years' toil and privation.

To the Soldiers of Bedford County.

Upon a resolution introduced into Congress by Senator Foote, upon which many Senators delivered their views, and much sectional excitement was aroused, Daniel Webster began his second speech with this example of logical precision: "When the mariner has been tossed for many days in thick weather and on an unknown sea, he naturally avails himself of the first pause in the storm, the earliest glimmer of the Sun, to take his latitude and ascertain how far the elements have driven him from his due course. Let us imitate this prudence and before we float further in the waves of this debate, refer to the point from which we departed, that we may at least be able to conjecture where we now are."

Let us now imitate this same prudence, and avail ourselves of the first pause after the storm of war to ascertain how far the elements of political discord have driven some of us from the true course of patriotic duty. During the last two administrations of the Federal Government prior to the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln into the office of Chief Executive of the Nation, the people of the United States were divided upon the question of extension and non-extension of slavery.

The most powerful political party in the North believing slavery to be an evil, desired it to be confined to its then present limits; the South having grown up with this institution, and knowing it to be peculiarly adapted to the aridocratic views of a people who loved to rule rather than to be placed upon an equality with the "greasy mechanics and small fist farmers" of the North, desired its extension.

No depredations upon the system of slavery where it already existed, was meditated by the party of non-extensionists, and so was not notoriously asserted and perhaps nearly universally believed.

In 1860 the people again went to issue, as before, upon this question, and the result was the great triumph of the non-extensionists. There was no constitutional violation in the verdict given. There was now nothing to justify a rebellion on the part of the South because of their reported defeat, more than there had been before on the part of the North.

The damnable secession dogma of State Rights was made the pretext for the rebellion, which though long before meditated, followed the election of Mr. Lincoln to the presidency. The South had not forgotten the teachings of Calhoun, and now could practice the lessons of his inspired liturgy. Nothing could have been a better pretext for secession in the hands of Southern fire-eaters than this dogma, and, never, was it thought, with better prospect of success than now, could it be applied.

It must prove its merits, some of them were already known. The doctrine was known to be so plausible that nearly every person in the South would indorse it, and the ignorance of the masses would see in it the cause of our forefathers in the revolt against the tyranny of Britain. They said the South can see as hurred in open defiance against the federal authorities, and the North may turn its eyes to its government for its vindication if it will, until the fourth of March next when we shall be able to take care of ourselves; forsooth, many senators and representatives in their congress are ours; in their Cabinet Floyd is our, and Calhoun and Thomson is ours, and the President is everybody's.

But the South was so eager for a distinct nationality, that preparations were continual making for months prior to the election in 1860 to achieve that end. The result of the election for President, they well knew could be determined by their will. Not one State in the South could be carried by the non-extensionists, while from the results of recent preceding elections in the Northern States with Mr. Douglas as their candidate, (the inevitable one of the honest northern democracy before the democratic national convention,) they could well expect to win. They felt it would be so. They were just as well prepared now as they could ever expect to be to establish their own independence. The election of the Republican nominee was determined upon if a southern man could not be made the choice of the Democratic convention at Charleston or Baltimore.

A southern man was not made the choice of those conventions, and the prestige of success perched upon the Republican party.

Mr. Lincoln was elected President, and thousands of imaginary encroachments upon the guaranteed rights of the South, by the incoming administration were paraded before an easily deluded people; and State after State renounced its allegiance to the Federal Government. Our forts were captured, our treasury robbed, our guns stolen, and the framers of the constitution were said to have forgotten to give the President the power to "coerce a State." The old Public Functionary beheld, with complacency, the disruption of the States, whilst a patriotic people clamored for his interposition against this treason until their impatience could scarcely longer forbear. Just centre fell upon him from all the newspaper presses that had supported Mr. Lincoln, and not a few that had opposed him; but many indulging friends in the North beheld with sorrow the error of his views, and by a series of compassionate excuses in his behalf made themselves the opponents of the policy that the advocates of the incoming administration were endeavoring to urge upon him.

Of this, again:

The Ladies Aid Society, of Bedford, ceased its labors on the 18th of July, last, despatched their last box of Hospital supplies, and settled up the business of the society most satisfactorily, leaving a balance of 65 cents in the treasury, after the payment of all its liabilities.

Since its organization, the Society has forwarded to the Women's Branch of U. S. Sanitary Commission, Philadelphia, from May 15, 1863, to July 18, 1865, 21 boxes of Hospital supplies. In addition to this, they distributed in the hospital at Bedford, a number of articles, forwarded a box to the sick and wounded soldiers at Gettysburg, and a box of fancy articles to the Great Central Fair held in Philadelphia, in June, 1864.

FRANKLIN AND MARSHALL COLLEGE.—At the late annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of this college, it was a mistake to suppose that he was white paper for nothing.

It is a mistake to suppose that he is paid without cost.

It is a mistake to suppose that he can do bodily by faith.

It is a mistake to suppose that it is easy thing to please everybody.

It is a mistake to suppose that a paper not worth buying which contains only what we know and believe already.

It is a mistake to suppose that money for a paper would be as good to us as hence it is now.

It is a great mistake to believe that we would not be thankful for what is due and for of Mr. Cessa as President of the Board of Trustees, is a step in the right direction, and a very important one. Mr. Cessa possesses in a high degree all the requisite qualifications for this responsible position. He is a man of progress, fully up with the spirit of the age, and is, moreover, in the prime of life. The friends of the College, therefore, have cause to congratulate themselves upon the eminent fitness of this selection.—Exchange.
