How to make a Good Barnyard.

Several things are essential to render a barnyard a good one. It must be so constructed that water from any source will not accumulate in it.

Now, the first thing is to provide for carrying off the surplus water that will be liable to find its way among the manure.

The next step is to grade the yard, either by hauling earth away, leveling off the knolls, or by drawing in compact earth to fill up the depressions.

The next job will be to pave the whole, or a portion of it. Stones of various sizes and forms may be used.

After the paving is finished, spread sand, gravel, or finely-pulverized clay all over the pavement and work it into the interstices.

When laying the stones, the workman needs a trowel to place sand, or fine gravel beneath this or small stones, to raise them up to the line, and a rammer made of a billet of hard wood with an iron ring, like that of a beetle, on the bottom of it, to drive those stones that are too high, down even with the line.

COMPOST HEAPS, &c.

From Germantown Telegraph. A few things just now, may be of use to some persons who, like myself, believe that manure is not only worth having, but that it is worth saving and worth a little trouble in making.

Have you got five or ten acres of Woodland on your farm? Then gather up now before winter sets in, twenty large loads of leaves; if you have not time for so many, get all you can—the more the better—and spread them in your barnyard; they make first-rate bedding for your cattle; they prevent any loss of liquid or solid manure, and they are of themselves one of the best manures you can get.

Have you a ditch to clean out—a pond that is nearly filled with leaves and mud, that has been collecting in it for years? See to it at once, and don't throw the dirt away, or haul it out to the road to get rid of it, but heap it up somewhere near your barn, where you can get it to turn it, and mix some refuse straw leaves and a little lime with it, before spring.

There may be some old rotten logs or stumps lying about in your woods, don't let them stay there any longer; they will do you more good if scattered on your cultivated ground, than if left where Nature let them fall.

If you think it won't pay, sit down and count the cost. The leaves cost you nothing, your team is standing idle in the stable; your hired man is like yourself, not got much to do this morning, to be sure, there is a little corn yet to hush, but it is so damp from the heavy rain last night that it won't do to get it at yet.

Now, hitch up and go to the woods—you can get two loads before dinner, which will add at least one load to your manure heap; when hauled out next spring it will cover at least nine square rods. Many farmers would give and give $1.25 for such a load, and haul it two or three miles, and here you can get it for nothing and have only half a mile to haul it. Now, how many such loads can be made this fall yet? Let every one find out for himself.

Did you ever plow for corn in the fall? You answer no! Well, try an acre or two by way of experiment this season, and see if the out-corn is half as bad on that part of your field as they will be on the rest, and then see how much sooner you can get your corn in, next spring, than if your plowing had to be done then. One single week in planting may save a whole crop from early frosts the succeeding autumn.
