From the Germantown Telegraph. AGRICULTURAL READING.

If a man has but a single acre of land, dollar, he cannot put it to a better use than to subscribe for an agricultural newspaper. one in the smallest degree competent to the task: and how much greater his advantage when the counsel and experience of practical men from all parts of the country are thrown together in an agricultural newspaper, and a "multitude of counsellors," and car listen to their interesting deliberations, and profit by them if he will.

There are, however, those who have an honest conviction against what they call 'book farming," simply because they sappose it consists of mere theory, and hence reject all reading matter of the subject, as being of that character, while others who have proved their practical utility, -because they combine and illustrate the experience of practical Edinburgh Review (Whig.) men, -showing what has actually been done,

Among the best and most intelligent farmers in the land are always found the patrons of agricultural newspapers. Go where you will, through the best farming districts of the State, where the land is in the highest state of cultivation, and where the domestic econ omy is all regulated in perfect order, and you will invariably find agricultural papers there; but they are seldom met with where universal neglect and ignorance prevail.

Now, this is not theory; these remarks are not based upon interest or mere imagination, but are the results of actual experience and observation. There is no subject, whether religious, political or commercial, that interests the attention of men, which absolutely admits of a greater improvement or a more boundless variety than the cultivation of the soil. Vast improvements are in progres and will yet be made to an almost infinite ex tent. The agriculturist of the present day is only in the infancy of his batter plans; the slumbering energies of the farmer are waking and agriculture "is unmantling some of the brightest features of her hidden glory."

Not only do different systems prevail in different countries, but in different portions of the same country; in some they are dictated by peculiarity in soil and climate, while in others they have arisen out of local habit, or they spring from improvements which have not been generally disseminated, and even in the rudest districts there may be some things that merit our attention.

Now, it must be evident that some of thes ystems must be preferable to others, and that no man can determine which is best without being acquainted with all; ner can a farmer be said to be completely master of his business until he has attained that knowledge. And how can be more readily or better attain it than when these different systems and improvements are presented to him in the pages of an agricultural journal? It is no sufficient that he already gets what he consid ers a fair return for his capital and industry if by other modes of culture he can obtai more. He may be satisfied with his present vield of crops, taking his neighbors as a stand ard, but if by any other method he can grow five bushels more to the acre, it is certainly t his interest and is his duty to adopt it wheth er it is "book-farming" or not.

that all nears are improved by being gatl before fully ripe. Some should approach nearer maturity than others. But early aples should be fully ripe, as a general rule, and all the late winter varieties should be gathered when too hard to yield to the pressure of the thumb, and always before heavy possible. There will be a few specimens not yet mature, but you can afford to throw them out to save the best and the main crop. When a good keeping variety begins to drop freely a good keeping variety begins to drop freely do well to call and make arrangements to from the tree, as is sometimes the case, settle their orders for Machines in time for mowing course the balance of the crop that remains on cure the balance of the crop that remains on the tree as soon as possible; but they should not be mixed with those on the ground—not TAKE NOTICE Windfalls will not keep-for, in addition to the injury sustained from the fall, they become heated by lying upon the ground exposed to the sun and hot air, and the ripening process already commenced is hastening to rapid decay.

No matter how het the weather is, an ple is always cool while upon the tree, and in that condition should be taken care of, if we would have it keep in its most perfect condition for the full development of all the delicious juices with which it is so abundantly supplied. How to obtain it in that condition will be my purpose now to show. We have seen that it must be carefully gathered before it is too ripe, as it is commonly termed; but I say before it is ripe, for when it is ripe it is fit to eat, and that should certainly not be the case with winter apples when gathered.

We have also seen that heat hastens the ripening process, and that cold retards it. Apples should therefore, be kept cool, barely so as not to freeze. A minimum temperature of thirty-four degrees is probably about right, with as little fluctuation as possible.

It is not for the purpose of assuming to best metned of keeping apples that I give the subject so large a space in this address, but it is to give it more prominence in our deliberations than it has heretofore had. I regard it as one of the points very much overlooked in all meetings of this kind.

Whether we regard the ripening process as a vital or a chemical action, it is quite sure that it should go on gradual and unchecked until all the good qualities are fully developed, and when the highest point of excellence is attained, then the fruit should be used. It is never so good as when just fully ripe; but is frequently eatable for a long time. Some varieties become dry and mealy, some tough and leathery. Others, by being kept very cool, will frequently remain in a very good ndition for a long time, or by the use of artificial means may be kept for an almost in-

I hold that the ripening process, once commenced, goes on, no matter how cold, if frost is not present; slowly, perhaps, but uninter-ruptedly, until full maturity. Hence, the importance of a cool cellar, which should always be dry and dark. It should be frequentallow of it. Some varieties are much more sensitive to their treatment than others. The Winesap for instance, which has a thick skin may be abused a great deal in handling and but indifferently cared for in the cellar, and yet it will keep pretty well; that is, it will rot garden or even a cow, and can raise a single but little; but, if kept close and warm, it is subject to a fungus, that renders it scarcely tolerable to eat. But if it is kept cool and Next to the Bible, such a work ought to be in dry, all its best qualities are retained to the the hands of every farmer. No man in his last. It is also one of the varieties that does senses ought to reject useful information rel- best kept on open shelves. The Belmont, or ative to the culture of the soil, if offered by the other hand, which I regard as one of the best and most profitable apples on this table is very impatient of bad treatment. Its skin is smooth and thin, and flesh of delicate tex ture. If roughly handled and kept in a warn room it soon decays. If carefully handled laid before him. He there has the wisdom of and kept in a cool place it keeps with very little waste till April or May. Indeed, it is, with me, under such treatment, one of the

ing reasons:

1. They sew direct from the spools, and require no rewinding of thread. 2. They are more easily understood and used and less liable to derangement than other machines.

3. They are capable of executing perfectly, without change of adjustment, a much greater variety of work than other machines.

4. The stitch made by these machines is much more firm, clastic, and durable, especially upon articles which require to be washed and iroued, than any other stitch.

5. This stitch, owing to the manner in which the under thread is inwrought, is much the most plump and beautiful in us., and retains this plumpness and beautiful in us., and retains this plumpness and beauty even upon articles frequently washed and ironed until they are worn out.

6. The structure of the seam is such that, though it be cut or broken at intervals of only a few stitches, it will neither open, run, or ravel, but remains firm and durable.

7. Unlike other machines, these fasten both ends of the seam by their own operation.

8. With these machines, while silk is used upon the right or face side of the seam, cotton may be used upon the other side without lessening the strength or durability of the seam. This can be strength or durability of the seam. the right or face side of the seam, cotton may be used upon the other side without lessening the strength or durability of the seam. This can be done on other machine, and is a great saving upon all articles stitched or made up with silk. These machines, in addition to their superior merits as instruments for sewing, by a change of adjustment, easily learned and practiced, execute the most beautiful and permanent embroidery and
