THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW for January, Ticknor & Fields, Boston, with an unus Ticknor & Fields,—Boston, with an unusu. ally interesting table of contents has been for some time before us. The number opens with a paper on Capt. Lohn Smith and his connection with the ear. John Smith, and his connection with the ear ly history of our country.

Emerging from the delightful region of ro-mance and fiction, Capt. John Smith is one of the first personages whose adventures charm the mind of the school boy, when he comes to the solid and substantial ground of Amer ican history. Coming to our shores more than one hundred years after their discovery, he yet seems to belong to a more distant pe riod than Columbus, because we read his sto ry through a dimmer and more doubtfu sure ourselves that the bright and clearly defined period of the Peloponnesian War, was more remote than that of the Crusades. Though sharing in the hardships and trials of the first colonists of a new world, his ad ventures associate him in the mind, with the paladins, who accompanied Richard to the the forests of the new. Reading his own account of brilliant exploits, the mind be comes peculiarly receptive for any adventure no matter how marvelous; and his rescue by the queenly daughter of Powhatan, while charming us with its romance, excites n suspicion of its truth. His perilons escape We are requested to announce that in Egypt, in Picardy, in France, his combats with the Turks in Styria, could only be Across a gulf of two centuries and a half

The state of the sections and no more than mention briefly the grounds apon which the doubts rest, and leave it to the reader to pursue the interesting subject if he wishes, in the review which heads this notice. In 1608, the year following the capture of Captain Smith, no far from the Chickahominy river, he publish ed in London, what he called a "True Relation." In this "Relation" there is not one word about Pocahontas. In 1624 after Po-cahontas had married Rolfe, and had visited England, where Smith saw her, Capt. Smith published in London another work called the "General History," where the story of Pocahontas first makes its appearance. In the story published in 1608, he speaks of the ex-

of a third Turk, did the enemy acknowledge his superior prowess. Captured at length, Smith was sold to a pasha who made him a present to his beautiful mistress. The lady, mercial Advertiser thus refers to an import- (of course) fell in love with him, and not to her brother, in a distant province. The brother was not long in discovering how affairs stood. Smith was stripped and beaten, and if the writer should then prefer, he or she can afterwards easily find a publisher without the "serial" preliminary. Pardonze,—Norval Hawk and the three Burkholders were pardoned by Governor Curtin just previous to his retirement from office. Hawk and the Burkholders, it will be recollected, were convicted about a year agoin the court of Blair county of the larceny of a large quantity of all kinds of goods from the cars of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Altoona, and were sentenced for a number of years to the penitentiary.

Eight panthers were killed in Centre county within one week—four by the Hall brothers of Unionville, near that place; three in the mountains back of Port Matilda, and one near Mechanicsville. Aaron and John Hall recently shot thirteen deer in seven days; and it is said that Aaron alone has killed between forty and fifty during the past season.

The Hollidaysburg Register says. In this century of magazines, new authors are more and more likely to make their first bow to the public in a periodical than in a book. If the new writer's "serial" has attracted attention it is re-issued as a book, and if the writer should then prefer, he or she can afterwards easily find a publisher without the "serial" preliminary. Sometimes this first appearance is by several short productions in stead of one long one. Henry Ward Beecher, for instance, is at present vigorously at work upon his first book. It is true that several volumes have been issued with his name upon their title pages; but all these have been compilations of paragraphs, newspaper exticles, sermons or lectures. Hawthorne, again, wrote many short magazine stories and sketches before venturing upon a story of book size.

DIED

In Friends Cove, December 24, 1866, MARY VIRGINIA, daughter of Mr. Emanuel O'Neal, aged 8 years, 1 month, and 26 days.

Near Schelleburg, Jan. 7th, Miss MARY E. ALLISON, daughter of the late James Allison, Esq. Her disease was typhoid fever. For a number of years she had been a teacher in the public schools of this and Somerset county.

Wherever she taught she won the love and confidence of her patrons. For a year or so she was nervous system greatly impaired, she yielded to the entreaties of friends and returned to her home-and shortly after resumed her former occupation—that of teaching. She leved the society of children, and ever strove to inculcate principles of irtue and morality in their young minds.

Disease attacked her in the school room in the midst of her duties; she was taken home and all that love and friends could accomplish was done but all in vain. Death to her presented no terrors, her implicit faith and confidence robbed him of his sting. She spoke calmly of her approaching and, and made some arrangements regarding her funeral, disposed of some souvernirs etc., and sent messages to absent friends.

In her death a widowed mother has lost an affectionate daughter, three brothers and one sister a loving and self-sacrificing sister.
