portunate and doubt whether she will ever get a Pension, and distress the already miscrable widow and her wretched little ones on every hand. Death is coveted as a relief from the pangs and woes of this ungenerous life. At last she is, perhaps, assured that all the testimony necessary to the successful prosecution of her case is made. Hope takes the place of despair. In the Hope takes the place of despair, argument dessful prosecution of her case is made. Hope takes the place of despair. In the muss of her anticipations comes a demand for the evidence of some commissioned officer having personal knowledge of the time when, the place where and the circum stances under which the disease was contracted. A year or eighteen months have rolled away. The officers have been discharged and gone to the four quarters of the globe. The Adjutant General is applied to, he may know their post office address, or he may not; but grant it that he does; they are written to and weeks and months again roll away before any reply is received, if any is received; or perhaps, after several communications they deign to reply that they know nothing, verily. This is uniformily the case in four applications out of five, and in nineteen cases out of twenty in the applications of drafted men. The above is only one of many cases.

The Government for the purpose of protecting itself against a few frauds has allowed the adoption of rules so stringent in the Pension Office that there is not a county in the loyal States, but has at least a dozen such cases pending, and we can point to twenty in the country of Bedford alone. Is it not heirrible to contemplate the misery and wretchedness which is thus entailed by

There seems to have been an abundance of good things on hand in the way of private and local bills and monopoly legislation the past winter, but not sufficient to satisfy the greed of these public leeches, so when the appropriation bill was reported, there was found in it a section providing for the increase of the pay of members to fifteen hundred dollars. After some discussion in the House, the amount was fixed at $1350. Now this may not be too much for good men, but unfortunately the number of such, that get to the Legislature, is few.
