MORE BARN ROOM WANTED. the farm that ought not to be tolerated later. The farmer in the clearing, or upon the prairie, has everything pressing upon him at once and must meet his most imperious wants first. He must have shelter for his family, and food for himself and stock. The log house and barn upon the most limited scale will answer for a while, but both are temporary expedients to be superseded at the earliest moment barn are not merely matters of taste, but of economy. An ample barn for the storage of crops and the shelter of stock should be regarded as a necessary investment of capital in all farming in the Northern and Eastern States, This is better understood in Penusylvania than in any other part of the country and the barn that bears the name of the State is, in many respects, a model. It contempla tes the shelter of all stocs, and the storage of all crops raised upon the farm; and if it also provided shelter for manure, it would, with abundant light and free ventilation, mee

The loss from this source i immense in all parts of the country. Even in thrifty New England, where a barn of some kind is found upon every farm, a large part of the hay and corn-fodder is stored in stacks, What was the differ and the open yard is still often met with as the only receptacle for manure. There is waste of labor in the topping and securing of stacks, and waste of fodder in all that part of he stack that is exposed to the ground and barn hay always brings the higher price, there is deterioration through the whole mass. In the West, there is much more loss from this source, for there is much less barn-room, and, in addition to this, great damage from the exposure of the grain crops to the weather The wheat crop for this year has been gather ed in excellent condition, for very little rais fell, in all the grain growing districts during harvest. But this is an exceptional season If those districts had been visited with th ains and cloudy weather that have prevaile along the seaboard, we think the grain cros would have been damaged to the amount of one-third of its value. This sometimes hap pens, and there is much more damaged than sound wheat in the market. Ordinarily the wheat is left in small shocks, with two bun dles laid crosswise for a cap, until the threshing machine comes, which may be within two weeks or two months after cutting. If the weather is bad, the grain moulds and sprouts, and the market is crowded with damage wheat. The straw also is injured for feeding purposes. The loss to the country from thi source amounts annually to many millions o dollars. If it could be saved it would pay al

Then, a good barn saves immensely in the expenses of keeping stock and in the conve timate that shelter saves one-third in fodder northern half of the Northern States. Th consumption of food to keep up animal hea in freezing weather is very great, and this does not benefit the farmer. He wants at ase of flesh and fat, articles that a stack yard regimen rarely gives. With a plenty of grain, an animal will thrive out of doors, but he does not thrive as he would under shelter It is too expensive, even in the grain dis tricts, to substitute corn for boards. out barns, also, the farmer is very much a the mercy of the grain speculator. With them, he can store his hay and grain, and sell when the market suits. The speculator knows the situation, and visits the regions where the barns are yet to be built. He knows the farmers must sell, for he has no place to store his grain. He generally pre fers the tender mercies of the speculator whom he knows, to the commission merchan in the city, whom he does not know. He wants the cash in hand aud takes what he car get. As wheat often advances fifty per cent in a season, the farmer ought to he able to take advantage of the rise. If grain could be kept more in first hands, it would benefit con umers, for it would tend to make uniform prices. Nobody but speculators would suffer. In the plans of barns that we frequently present in these pages, some of them giving the results of years of study by practical farmers to meet their own wants, our readers will find many profitable suggestions .- American Agiculturist.

MANURING THE WHEAT CROP.

Manure holds the same relation to the far that steam does to the engine; it is the force used to accomplish the desired result. Let the one fail in the engine and the wheels stop. let the other be withdrawn from the soil and its useful products rapidly and constantly diminish. If the farmer cannot manure every crop, then he should consider from which h can best afford to withhold the fertilizers. If he designed growing a crop of oats, followed by one of wheat. it would not be wise to apply the manure to the oat crop and give none to the wheat. It would not pay as well; the crop of manure would be sold in a cheap mar-ket. So, too, it might be injudicious to manure a crop of potatoes and have none to apply to the succeeding grain. The season in hich manure should be applied, the stage o the crop, and the depth at which it should be placed, are also topics which the farmer should think much about. Many consider that if manure is only buried in the soil it is enough, no matter whether it be deep or sha low, whether the subsoil be firm or leachy. if the manure is in the earth the crops, they argue, will get the full benefit of it-sor time or another. But this is not always true and it is certainly more scientific and profitable farming to apply manure—not to increase the general fertility of the soil with a view to benefiting several crops in succession-but to directly augment the yield of a specified crop. This course will bring the most profit, for products which command the highest prices are thus largely increased.

Doubtless most farmers will assent to the assertion that the wheat crop needs manure as much as any other one, and pays as well for its liberal application. But the profits of this operation may be greatly varied by the manner in which it is done. Plowing in nanure deeply will not give as good results as placing it on or just under the surface. It is less labor for the farmer to plow in the manure, for it is easier to haul it on a hard surface than over freshly plowed ground. And then it is out of the way of the harrow and the

The rains in their descent wash the soluble elements downwards and away from the searching roots. Surface manuring reverses these pro and is more rational and productive of more mmediate and visible results. Well fermented farm-yard manure is good enough for any crop; and the best manure for all, but the trouble is we can't get enough of it. Whether the wheat grower can at by something better. The new house and ford to purchase and use fertilizers is a ques tion which he must settle by experiment and observation. Lime may often be used with great profit; plaster is beneficial in some seasons, and salt returns a liberal profit if sown on rich lands in humus. Fertilizers for the wheat plant should be applied before the seed has germinated, as a general rule, at least before the Spring begins. The prefera ble time is just before sowing. -Rural New Yorker.
