IMPROVEMENT OF LAND BY GRAZING.

If the soil can have all its crops returned to it in kind, or in the shape of manure made by feeding them to animals upon it, it will constantly improve. A worn out soil left to grow up to forest will recover its fertility in due time. Cow pastures decline in productivity because the cows are usually yarded at night, and a large part of their manure as well as milk and calves, is removed from the soil. It is different with the grazing of beavers or of fattening sheep. Where the object is to make beef for market, bullocks of three or four years of age are bought in the spring in good condition, and turned into the pasture as soon as the grass is sufficiently grown to support them, and are sold off in the fall. It is considered a matter of great importance by graziers that the pasture should be large, and should have only so many cattle as it can carry through the season. It has been found in experience that the changing of beavers from one pasture to another has a bad influence upon them. They become restless and lose flesh. In many districts where ground plaster does well, it is sown at the rate of a bushel or two to the acre every spring. Even in this small quantity the effect is often astonishing, bringing in white clover, and on pastures where it has not been applied before it will sometimes increase the feed four-fold. With this cheap dressing and grazing beavers, many run down farms have been brought up to a high degree of productivity. Some boast that their meadows will carry a bullock to the acre. With good judgment in buying and selling, this is an easy way to get rent from land. The stock require very little attention after they are turned into the pasture, until the drover comes in the fall, or they are otherwise marketed.

Sheep are said to improve land more rapidly than bullocks. The manure is more evenly distributed if the land is level; and if it is broken, the most of it is dropped where it is most needed, upon the tops of the knolls. They also crop bushes more closely than beavers, but in order to keep brush under, all the brush should be cut with the scythe at the start, and the pasture should be heavily stocked as long as the sprouts push. In Harrison county, Ohio, and in other parts of the State, where the winter wheat has become an uncertain crop, we are informed that many of the farmers have resorted to wool as a substitute. This crop has several important advantages over wheat. It involves much less labor, and improves, rather than exhausts the soil. It is found that the sheep pastures are growing more productive. Wool at fifty cents a pound can be carried to market profitably, much farther than wheat at the ordinary prices. A pound of wheat is now worth but three or four cents, and freight on grain is about as expensive as on wool. The latter, moreover, is one of the few products of the farm that can be held over without serious risk of loss. Some of the finest wool in the State is produced in this County, and has been sold from fifty to sixty cents a pound this season. In considering the question of abandoning sheep husbandry, as some may be tempted to do, under temporary reverses of falling prices, we think due credit should be given to sheep as improvers of the soil. The farmer can hardly grow poor whose soil is constantly rich.—American Agriculturist.

ROADSIDE IMPROVEMENTS.—Too often, as we have traveled over the country this summer, have we witnessed a fine house, good buildings and fences, but the road-side outside of the fence line containing more or less rubbish evidently the gatherings and leanings of the garden and lawn trees. Sometimes the street or roadway is clear of this; but while the grass is clipped inside the fence the outside is left to grow long and rank, with more or less coarse weeds, presenting just that appearance to the man's grounds, that the finding of a heap of dirt under the lounge would to the housewife, and giving him in our view no claim to a better name than would be applied to such a housewife.

Our horticultural readers should each and all strive to make the outward appearance of their grounds clean, neat and tasteful, first by keeping away all rubbish from the street, next by frequent mowing and destruction of weeds, and lastly by planting and caring for shade trees and flowering shrubs, giving themselves pleasure, and attracting notice from every passer-by; and again, as an example to those of their neighbors, who are not readers or not having learned to move out of their original tracks, continue to make brush piles, keep hog-pens, and grow thistles, mullen, etc., in front of their houses.—The Horticulturist.

THE PLANTING.—In planting trees this fall, all should remember that it is requisite to set the tree only just so deep as to enable it to stand, for we can earth to protect it from heaving of the winter's frosts; and as soon as spring opens and the ground is levelled as spring opens and the ground is levelled down, the roots will start and seek their appropriate depth. If we dig a deep hole, we "matters and things" a heavy thunder storm arose. The loud peals of thunder and vivid flashes of lightning filled them with terror and fearful apprehensions. Suddenly a tremendous crash caused the loving couple to start as though they had received an electric shock. Jonathan, throwing his arms around his dear, exclaimed—"Hug up to me, Lizzie, let's die like men!"

As Lute is an awful radical, this touched his pride, and he replied in his usual stammering style: "I advise you a not to be more m-money than you wish to lose. I acknowledge I have all the symptoms, but not the d-d-disease."

As a newly married couple from down East were one night lying in bed, talking over "matters and things" a heavy thunder storm arose. The loud peals of thunder and vivid flashes of lightning filled them with terror and fearful apprehensions. Suddenly a tremendous crash caused the loving couple to start as though they had received an electric shock. Humorous.

The greatest bet ever made has been decided by the printers to be the alphabet.

A boy's idea of having a tooth drawn may be summed up as follows: "The doctor hitched fast to me, pulled his best, and just before it killed me the tooth came out."

Two distinguished philosophers took shelter under one tree during a heavy shower. After some time, one of them complained that he felt the rain. "Never mind," replied the other, "there are plenty of trees; when this one is wet through we will go to another."

There's our grandmother, says a contemporary, a striking instance why woman should vote. She's paid taxes on a dog for the last ten years, and declares she won't stand it any longer—she'll either vote or kill the dog.

An Irishman speaking of his children, said: "They are all well but the one born in this country. I must take him to the Green Isle, for I believe he is languishing for his native air, that he never smelt at all."

It is a shame, husband, that I have to sit here mending your old clothes!" "Don't say a word about it, wife; the least said is soonest mended."

A TRAVELER stopped at an inn in a neighboring village, and finding the landlord and landlady fighting, cried out, "Halloo, who keeps this house?" The wife replied, "That's just what we are trying to decide."—Ex.

MEN HURT.—"As the afternoon way train was coming from Baltimore, recently, the conductor, calling out the names of way stations, shouted, in explosive tones, 'Jessup's Cut!'" "Was he hurt much?" inquired a demure looking passenger; whereupon there was a general snicker, and the conductor proceeded to another car, called out, in a lower key, "Jessup's Cut!"

As a weary traveler was winding his way through the mud in a far-west region of the country, he discovered a young maiden seated in front of the door of a small log house. He rode up in front of the cabin, and asked the girl for a drink of water. He drank it, and, she being the first woman he had seen for several days, offered her a dime for a kiss. The young maiden accepted the offer, and received both the kiss and the dime. The traveler was about to resume his journey, but the girl never before having seen a dime asked: "What am I to do with the dime?" "You may use it any way you wish," he replied, "it is yours." "If that's the case," said she, "I'll give you back the dime and take another kiss."

SOME editor says that the destiny of the world often hangs on the smallest trifles. A little miff between Charles Bonaparte and his lovely Letitia might have broken off a marriage which gave birth to Napoleon and the battle of Waterloo. To which a contemporary adds: "Yes that is a fact. Suppose a little miff had taken place between Adam and Eve! What then?"

WHEN Count D'Orsay first came to England as a very young man, about twenty-two years of age, he was invited to dine at Holland House, where he was seated next to Lady Holland herself, who supposed that the handsome stranger was a shy young man, awestruck by her majestic presence. Owing to a considerable abdominal development, her ladyship was continually letting her napkin slip from her lap to the ground, and as often as she did so, she smiled blandly, but authoritatively upon the French Count, and asked him to pick it up. He politely complied several times, but at last, tired of this exercise, he said, to her great surprise—"Had I not better madam, remain under the table, in order that I may hand you your napkin more rapidly."

HAD THE SYMPTOMS, BUT NOT THE DISEASE.—The Janesville Gazette tells the following good one of Lute Taylor of the Prescott Journal: Last winter, Lute was travelling in the stage with a party of gentlemen, among whom was a noted Democratic politician from Minnesota now a candidate for a State office. The day was intensely cold and the company were obliged to stop occasionally to warm up. Halting at a little inn at the roadside the democrat invited Lute to take a drink of whisky, which he readily assented, and as Lute was both dry and cold, he turned out a pretty stiff "horn," swallowed it instantly and repaired at once to the store to thaw out. Late's friend and easy style suited the democrat to a dot, and after freely imbibing himself, he walked up to Lute and said: "I'll bet any man ten dollars you are a good radical, this touched his pride, and he replied in his usual stammering style: "I advise you a not to be more m-money than you wish to lose. I acknowledge I have all the symptoms, but not the d-d-disease."
