

Farm, Garden & Household.

From the Journal of the Farm, Garden & Household.

While the policy and aim of the Journal shall be honestly and persistently to advance the use of concentrated, or commercial manures, and to urge upon farmers the necessity of adopting them as a means of enhancing the productiveness of their lands, it shall just as honestly and faithfully urge the utilization of all distinctively farm sources, to that end.

There can be no doubt that great indifference to this subject exists even in our more advanced agricultural sections, we mean where the evident culture and fertilization of the people should have taught them better things. A drive through the best cultivated and enlightened counties in the Middle States will reveal the fact that properly cultivated farm yards, and systematic plans of manuring and saving the natural resources of the farm, form the exceptions rather than the general rule. From an old and valued agricultural journal, now, unobscured, and edited by one of the less solid latter day publications, we, years ago, clipped the following pointed remarks upon the subject above introduced. It has lain in our drawer a long while, among other similar articles of practical merit, and we are sure will be re-producing here:

"If the question, 'are liquids flowing from manure heaps valuable?' were seriously submitted to the farmers of this county, it would provoke a smile of derision, that any one possessed of common sense would propose so simple a query. And yet, notwithstanding this perfect knowledge of the fact that this liquid is composed of a large portion of the most valuable ingredients of the manure heap from which it flows, how few farmers appear to consider it worth their while to save it from utter waste. We have been led to these remarks from having had frequent opportunities during the past two months of observing the reckless indifference manifested by many farmers in the construction and location of their barn yards. Indeed it appeared to us, that had it been the fixed design of the owners to afford the most complete escape for all the liquids from their barn yards, they could not have accomplished it more effectually. It is almost impossible to conceive of a more complete disregard of true economy. The farmer who year after year witnesses the streams of rich liquid manure flowing from his barn yard to the nearest rivulet, to be lost to him forever, or running along the roadside, rendering it unpleasant to the eyes and odoriferous, has a poor right to complain if his crops are less abundant than his neighbor's. Nor should it be a matter of surprise to him, after having supplied the same quantity of manure, plowed as deeply, pulverized as thoroughly, and in every other respect given it the same attention, the yield should all short of his who does not permit the washing rains to exhaust the most valuable portion of his manure heap.

"It should be a cardinal principle with every farmer to economize his manure. Upon it depends his success, and without it, his labors must to a very great extent, be without profit, if not attended with absolute loss. If it is found necessary to have the barn yard on a hillside, it is equally necessary to have the lower side of it protected by a wall, or some other arrangement by which the escape of liquid manure may be prevented. It is almost equally important to have a spout to convey rain water from the roof of the barn in some other direction than immediately through the barn yard. It is bad enough that the manure heap should be exposed to the rains which fall directly upon it, without adding to it the droppings from the roof of the barn. If such inconsiderate farmers were to behold the actual value of the fertilizing materials thus lost, rolling from their purses in the shape of dollars and cents, how energetically would they labor to prevent the waste. The loss of a single little dollar would stir them up to greater activity than the direct waste of a hundred times that little gold dollar's value in the form of liquid manure.—Year after year, slowly but steadily, the golden streams are flowing from their purses. Tell them of their error, and they acknowledge it, but rarely does it happen that being reminded of it in a friendly manner, they make a slight effort to correct it. How many are there who after a life time of steady unprofitable toil, find themselves no richer in lands or money than when they began. They cannot explain the reason. Other causes may have led to such discouraging results, but if the drain of liquid manure from their barn yards had been checked when they began farming, very many of these unsuccessful ones would have been as prosperous as their more prudent neighbors."

"LINE ABOUT APPLE TREES.—We have known farmers to make it a regular practice for successive years, to throw outside lines around their apple trees in the spring and summer. We once noticed that a tree standing in the immediate vicinity of our dwelling, had all at once, put forth such renovated energy, and we were at a loss for some time to define the cause. On examination, we found that a quantity of lime, which had accidentally been spilled and rendered worthless by becoming mixed with the refuse of the stable floor, had been thrown at the foot and around the tree, and to this, as the principal cause, we immediately accredited it, and purchased twelve casks of lime, and applied half a bushel to each of the trees in our orchard, and found that it produced immediately beneficial effects. Not the health of the trees only, but the quality of the fruit also, was greatly improved. This application will be especially beneficial in soils where there is a redundancy of vegetable matter. We would advise our farmers, in some places, especially in new forest lands, to make the experiment, and see if it is not deserving of the high recommendation it secures.

"An Irishman having challenged a gentleman to fight a duel, who somehow 'forgot' to attend the appointment, met accidentally that same day the offending party, and thus addressed him: 'Well, sir, I met you this morning, but you did not come; however, I am determined to meet you to-morrow, whether you come or not.'

ESTLEY'S COTTAGE ORGANS.

Are well ahead of all competitors and stand unrivalled in POWER, PURITY OF TONE and BRILLIANCY, and other points which go to make a first class instrument.

The "VOX HUMANA TREMOLO" is the greatest power and improvement on all instruments. It CHANGES and REPRODUCES all HUMAN VOICES. Do not confound this with the common tremolo in use. It is entirely different, and far superior to any other.

For sale wholesale and retail by: 18 N. Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

Send for descriptive circular and price list. The effect of your "Tremolo" is entirely new to our ears. It is a grand improvement on all instruments. No Tremolo has yet been invented that will so degree compare with this for beauty of effect.

Estley's Cottage Organs are without a superior for accuracy, quick articulation and round tone—their sound is clear, full, and sweet. The Cottage Organ is the best of its class ever made. It is adapted for church music of every kind.—Geo. Jackson, Pipe Organ Builder.

I am much pleased with the Cottage Organ which I purchased from you; it combines sweet, clear and powerful tones, and is a great favorite in our family circle, and will give us more pleasure than any other instrument we possess. We know of no organs of the class which possess so many valuable qualities.—J. Edgar, Bedford, Pa.

For the parlor, its sweetness is remarkable; for the church it has a power more organ-like than anything we have known. It is a grand improvement on all instruments. Persons wishing to purchase an organ are requested to examine the Estley instruments now in use at the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches, Bedford, Pa. July 12 1867, 9m
