Farming," has many good suggestions that will be of profit to these who give them bud is once swellen, it is very difficult to get consideration. It contains an element which is not always found in discussions of matters before there is any sign of swelling. is not always found in discussions of matters connected with agriculture, and that is the element of common sense. In our opinion farming has been conducted from time imway. They put in the crops at the same time, in the same month, and cultivated them in the same way, and got just about the same ore profitable, or a much more abundan yield of the same. They did not reason about the shrinking and swelling that loosen the the matter, but followed a track which had tire are prevented.

Farmers at the present day, especially what may be called fancy farmers, have gone to the other extreme. With them the cardinal virtue has been to disregard the past, to strike out some entirely new course, to do all their farming on some particular theory to which everything must be made to conform. If they have not taken to raising hobby-hor ses, they have taken to riding hobbies, unti many a one has been ridden to death.

Every farmer ought to be a reading and thinking man, looking into what is new, to see what value there may be in it; but farming is eminently a practical business, to be conducted not so much on theory as on experience. A theory may be very splendid, bu if it does not work well, it is worth nothing at all. An inventor of some fertilizing mate rial, for instance, may make it as clear as the sun, on paper, that it contains all that is requisite to insure an abundance of this or that particular crop; but it does not cause the crop to grow, if it proves a failure when it comes to be applied to the soil, it will not be worth any more to the farmer than a recipe

The great thing for each and every man to do, after getting all the suggestions and info nation that he can, from others and from books, is to exercise his own common sens in cultivating his grounds. Let him not b coverned by any mere theory, or by any ire rule of the past, but by the nature of his so he situation of his farm, the circumstar of his family, and a variety of consideration which cannot here be named; but especiall by his own observation and experience up his own farm. Experience is the result conducted in one direction; but common sens should be the judge to which all question

IMPROVEMENT IN GRAIN.

Experiments have demonstrated, and anal ogy has shown, that the finest and best san les of seed, continued for years, will improv the quality and quantity of the product. better wheat is thus raised; even a varie may be established. On this principle, ( farm stock), we have the Shorthorns, the bloaded horses, and the different breeds sheep, swine, poultry, etc. Experimen have not been made on the human specie but the same, no doubt, holds good here.

We plant and sow "as it comes." We take the seed of the same grain that we use in the aggregate, and sow it. Is not this the ca almost universally? Corn is an exception t ome extent-but why do we except cor Because it is handy to select. But why select at all? Because it is understood to be good Analogically, then, it is good to do the san with wheat, cats, barley, etc. But this isles easily [done; we therefore neglect it. How long will it take a farmer to go through his wheat, and secure the finest and ripest heads sufficient to sow an acre, or half an acre, or a nuarter-or even a pint of seep? This pin owed will be sufficient to form a test crop The best heads taken from this again, as sowed, will vield another test crop, from which should be taken as before; and so or for a number of years, say half a dozen, more still better. But three or four years will should be continued from selected wheat every time. In this way grain can be improve and crops enlarged. There will be large grains, earlier maturity, and better growth.

BED YOUR STABLES, -A borse, remarks the Rural World, will get tired of standing and treading on a hard floor; so will a cow, a sheep, a man. A soft bed feels easy—gives And yet we neglect the bedding stables, to a great extent. Injured timbs and other ailments, especially of the hoof, are the results often of a neglect here, as has been clearly enough shown, as as any man can clearly enough see, if he gives the subject a moment's thought. Bed with straw, which is plenty, or sawdust, or tan-bark, or shavings. The dryer these materials are the better. Every day remove the moistened bedding, and replace with new. Such afloor, well bedded, adds greatly to the warmth of a stable, and thus becomes a fodder saver. The small holes and crevices in a floor, with a good bed ding upon them, will let little or no cold through, and will drain the stable. Rather have a ground floor than a hard naked plank. -American Farmer.
