A SENATOR THAT HAS GOT RICH.

[From the Cincinnati Commercial.] I look across the street and see in front of Senator's house the carriage of another enator. The pair of blooded horses cost me thousand dollars. The gilded harness in keeping. The close, handsome, shining ach is one of Brenton's best, lined with ilk veivet, and graced with the choicest and ickest of plate glass. On the coachman's eat sit two of God's creatures, called men; me a bright mulatto, the other a white man and both in livery. They sit in solemn sience under their gay robe of furs and white loves. Directly, the door of the house pens, and two ladies, carrying a poor man's rune on their backs, descend the steps The footman swings down and opens the oor, with an easy grace the master cannot mitate. The door closes with a bang, the botman mounts, and the coach rolls away. Well, it seems but yesterday that the owner f all this came here a poor man.

We remember the fairy tale where the old witch touched the pumpkin and turned it into a coach, and so the ugly witch of the obby touched the poor man, and out of traud came the coach, and out of theft came the house, and swindles, drives, and stealings, oil and burnish. Like that witch, I ould touch that man with this delicate lit le pen of mine, and carriage, horses and all would disappear. For honor and honesty would claim their own, and the very clothes ould fall from the backs of wife and daugh-DONN PIATE.
