When Mr. T. saw the mass begin to move he called again to Dolan to escape, which he then tried to do but it was too late and he was caught by the falling mass and crushed to death. The mass of ore was over two tons in weight and fell about five feet. Mr. Dolan was a man about fifty years of age, of Irish descent and was regarded as a careful miner. No blame attaches to any one, the accident being one of those that frequently occur to men where long experience and familiarity with danger induces too great venturesomeness.
