GERMANY has a man without a breast-bone. There are plenty in the country who are without a back bone.

A PHILADELPHIA telegram says: The loss by the Cape May fire is estimated at $250,000. Boynton, the pearl diver, in whose store the fire originated, has been arrested, charged with causing the fire. The United States Hotel was valued at $90,000, and insured for $47,000.

THE workmen at the east end of the Hoosac Tunnel have unexpectedly struck a vein of soft rock, of the mica slate order, which is quite easily pried and picked off without blasting. What will be developed as to the extent of the vein is of course uncertain, and future developments will be watched with interest. The Tunnel Committee of the Legislature visited the work on Tuesday.

THE leading Canadian papers speak in generous terms of the defeated crew in the international boat race. The Toronto Globe describes how much more attention has been paid to rowing in the English universities than in the American, and says that Harvard has shown how excellent a crew she can turn out, and cannot justly be disappointed at having been beaten by Oxford under such circumstances.

AARON S. PENNINGTON, a prominent lawyer of Patterson, New Jersey, and brother of the late Governor Pennington, died very suddenly on Wednesday afternoon. He was playing whist with a party of friends, when, raising his hand to his head, he complained of faintness. A glass of water was brought, but gave him no relief. He was then laid upon a bed and a physician was sent for, but before his arrival Mr. Pennington expired. His disease was understood to be apoplexy.

PURCHASING BONDS.—The Secretary of the Treasury has instructed his assistant at Washington to continue through September the weekly purchases of bonds and sales of gold which have been made throughout August. Any one who pleases has a right to guess that Mr. Boutwell means to keep doing so until directed by Congress to do otherwise. We heartily trust that such is his purpose. The best answer to the demagogue cry that the debt can never be paid is to persist in steadily paying it.

GREAT BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO.—On Thursday the largest span of any truss-bridge in the United States was completed on the great bridge across the Ohio river at Louisville, which is destined to connect the Kentucky and Indiana shores. The bridge itself will be, when finished, (and the engineer in charge expects to turn over his contract for the building some time in November,) one of the most splendid structures of the kind in this or any other country. This span covers three hundred and seventy feet, and is a marvel of engineering skill.

THE idea of constructing a ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien and thus uniting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, has recently become a new pet in the fact that Rear Admiral Charles H. Davis, recently returned to the United States in the steamship Guerriere from the command of the South Atlantic fleet, has been ordered to make arrangements for a survey of the Isthmus in order to ascertain the practicability of cutting the canal. Likely enough this will be the next great work to which the constructive genius and enterprise of American engineers will be applied.

MUTILATED CURRENCY.—Treasurer Spinner has written a letter in respect to the redemption of mutilated currency, and as to any rules authorized or approved by the Department for detecting counterfeiters, in which he says: "No instructions have been issued by the Department relative to the mode of ascertaining the genuineness of United States notes; but the decision as to the character of the notes presented to them has been left to the discretion of the officers themselves. The Department has never promulgated or approved any system or sets of rules for the detection of counterfeiters, for the reason that it is believed no general rule can be laid down which would render all persons who may study them good judges of money. A careful comparison of suspected notes with those known to be genuine, good natural discernment, and familiarity with the different kinds of notes, are requisite to enable a person to distinguish counterfeiters from genuine notes with certainty. This was immediately made known to Dr. Linderman, and that officer, acting under instructions from the Government, commenced an investigation on the 14th inst. Three days after, General La Grange entered upon the duties of his office, and was informed of the deficit which had occurred in the office of the Coiner. It is alleged that this deficiency occurred between the 1st of July and the 1st of August, and that owing to the confusion which existed on account of the change of offices, some one abstracted the bullion from the Coiner's office. It has been stated that Mr. Schmolz intends to place securities for payment of the amount missing from the Treasury in the hands of Mr. Swain, the late Superintendent. The matter is still being investigated, and at least dozens no clue had been found to fasten suspicion on any one.

Poetry.

SEPTEMBER DAYS. In flickering light and shade the broad stream goes, With cool, dark nooks and checkered, rippling shallows; Through reedy fens its sluggish current flows, Where lilies grow and purple blossomed mallows.

The aster-blossoms above its eddies shine, With pebbles bared that seem their humming slowly, And in the meadow lands the drowsy kine, Making music with their sweet bells, tinkling slowly.

The thrill, thrill, on the hillside there, Sounds to its mate a note of love or warning, And turtle-doves re-echo, plaintively, From upland fields, a soft melodious mourning.

A golden haze conceals the horizon, A golden sunshine slants across the meadows; The pride and prime of Summer-time is gone, But beauty lingers in these Autumn shadows.

The wild hawk's shadow fleets across the grass, Its softened gray the softened green outlying; And fair scenes fairer grow while yet they are, As breezes freshen when the day is dying.

O weep September! thy first breezes bring The dry leaf's rustle and the squirrel's laughter, The cool, fresh air, whose health and vigor springs, And promise of exceeding joy hereafter.

WALF. Nodding to the zephyr, bowing to the breeze: Riding on a sunbeam, floating o'er the trees; The lofty mountain; down the open plain, Crossing o'er the meadow, then back again; Gliding into gardens everywhere, so free, Kissings pretty flowers, coquetting with the bee.

Merry as a cricket, gentle as a dove, Happy as a pigeon cooing to his love; Gossamer your person, dress so very airy, Graceful as a swallow, lighter than a fairy, Sailing through the country dancing o'er the town, What on earth so happy as the thistle down.

MISCELLANEOUS. "Thank fate I shall never be the prey of a fortune hunter."

As Sally Beauleure altered the words she threw herself back upon the sofa and tossed her handsome head with a little laugh.

"Your fortune is my face," rejoined her companion, as he gazed admiringly on her fine features. Sally opened her large eyes in astonishment.

"A compliment from you Tom!" she exclaimed. "I know I am not much given to pretty compliments, but you know, Sally, that I admire you all the same."

To tell the truth Tom Middleton had for a long time loved Miss Sally with all the strength of an earnest and constant nature; but he was very diffident, he had shrank from making known his attachment, fearing Sally's ridicule, though had been more confident of himself he might have read long ago a secret that Sally's eyes took little pains to conceal. But Tom never imagined how desirable a fellow he was in himself, and knowing he had no great fortune to bestow, he did not venture to offer his hand to the daughter of Senator Beauleure, and the reigning belle of the city. Sally was one of a large family, it is true, and portentious, but her father's position and her own beauty made Tom imagine her to be far removed from him. Now, he only looked hurt when she thus playfully sneered at his small compliment and turning away to the window did not catch the tender look that stole over Sally's handsome features.

"Well, what is the weather?" she asked, after a moment, as he still stood gazing out into the night.

"It is a beautiful moonlight, and I think I had better go."

"Go! Oh, Tom! Why this is the last time I shall see you for ever so long."

"And will you care?" he asked, as he came to her side.

Sally blushed. "Of course I shall care, Tom."

"No, Sally, to-morrow you are going to Washington. You will be a belle there, as you are everywhere, and you will soon forget me."

"No, indeed, Tom!" she replied earnestly. "Among all those strange faces and people I don't care anything about, I shall long for my old friends."

"But not me. You won't care much whether I am among the number or not."

"Yes, I shall."

Tom was a fool where women were concerned, or he would have known that those words in that soft tone meant, as it was a wild hope did spring up in his heart, but when he looked again at that beautiful woman it died away. "I am not brilliant enough for her," he thought, but he plucked up sufficient courage to put out his hand and take one of hers.

"You are very kind, Sally," he said. "I shall come on to Washington by and by, and then I shall know how sincere your words are."

Sally's cheeks burst, but at that moment the door opened. Tom dropped her hand, as one of the numerous young sisters came in, and the golden opportunity passed away, for they were not together again for that evening.

On that very same night, nearly a thousand miles away, two young gentlemen were speaking of this same young lady. They were travelers, who had accidentally met on board a steamer on Lake Erie. They were total strangers, and were ignorant of even each other's name, but had fallen into a chat as they strolled on the deck, under the rays of the full moon.

"I never was so far from land before in my life," said the elder of the two, a fine looking man perhaps thirty-five.

"Indeed!" exclaimed his companion, a handsome city-bred looking gentleman. "May I ask where you are from, that your experience has been so limited?"

"From the interior of North Carolina."

"Ah!" cried the stranger, and his cold features lit up into sudden interest. Then perhaps you know the Beauleure's?"

Very well, indeed; they are old friends of mine.

"And Miss Beauleure; you know her?"

"Certainly. And so he has been courting you?" Mr. Trumbull said shrewdly.

"Perhaps so; but are you sure he is the same man?"

"I think he is; but a question will soon set that at rest."

Sally started in her impulsive manner. "Could and I will introduce you and then I shall know the truth of this extraordinary story."

Mr. Trumbull would have remonstrated, but she was half across the room before he could interfere. Murray started forward with pleasure as he saw her approaching him.

"Here is an old friend of mine, who thinks he has seen you before," she said. "Mr. Trumbull, Mr. Murray."

The gentlemen shook hands, and then Mr. Trumbull said:

"I think we met on board a boat on Lake Erie last fall."

"Yes," replied Murray with a faint smile, "I remember it perfectly."

A few words were exchanged, and then Murray walked away.

"Are you going to marry him, Miss Sally?" asked Mr. Trumbull.

"No indeed."

"Is he rich?"

"He is said to be."

"Then your supposed fortune will be a matter of indifference to him?"

"But what if his is as mythical as mine?"

"You must find that out."

"No, I don't care to know now," said Sally. "Let us talk of something else."

"Yes, I thought you were going to ask after your old friends. Have you forgotten all about them in these gayeties?"

"Oh, no!" and Sally put query after query about her friends, until at last Mr. Trumbull said: "But you do not ask after Tom Middleton, and yet you might, for he cares more for you than all the rest put together."

"Oh, that's nonsense! But how is he?"

"He will tell you himself."

"Tom here?" exclaimed Sally, her face lighting up with delight.

"Yes, indeed, we came on together."

"And why hasn't he come to speak to me?"

"He says he did not dare, before all these people, but if you will go to your parlor I will send him here."

Sally started up at once, and Mr. Trumbull looked after her with a smile. He had been hoping for this match for a long time, and now as he went out to find Tom he whispered to him:

"Speak to her to-night man. I am sure she loves you."

Tom scarcely knew whether he was on his head or his heels as he made his way to the private parlor. He never could remember afterwards exactly what happened when he reached it. He only knew that Sally came to meet him with a bright, blushing face, and the next thing he was certain of she was clasped in his arms.

At a tolerable early hour the next morning a note was handed to Sally. It was from Mr. Murray, renewing his offer and begging for a speedy interview.

"Ask the gentleman to come up," said Sally to the servant, and Tom, who was with her, went out without one particle of jealous objection.

The young man came up and would have seized Sally's hand, but she drew it back haughtily. "Stop a moment, Murray, I should like to ask you a question."

He paused abashed by her resolute face. "What is it, Miss Beauleure?"

"Do you know how much money I am worth?"

He hesitated and stammered. At last he said: "Your friend Mr. Trumbull did mention to me that you had some fortune, but I assure you, dearest Sally, that it is of yourself alone I speak."

Sally checked him with an imperious gesture. "I have not a penny in the world!"

He stood still, looking at her with a pale, astonished face.

"Yes, sir, I am entirely without fortune, and whoever weds me must take a portionless bride."

"I am very sorry,"—he gasped out the words.

"No need to express your regrets, sir. I am engaged to be married, and I will bid you a good morning."

Murray got out of the room as best he could, and vanished that day from Washington. His wealth turned out to be a mere fabrication of his own, and he was heard of no more in fashionable circles.

"After all wasn't it funny that I should be courted for my fortune?" Sally said, as she related Mr. Murray's discomfiture to Tom.

"But I agree with Mr. Trumbull," he replied enthusiastically, "that you 'that you are worth your weight in gold.'"

REPUTATION.

The regulators are getting bold as they advance to the ballot-boxes, and if the people of Pennsylvania vote for Packer in October in view of the deliberate declarations of his intimate friend, Vallandigham, whom he entertained so handsomely at his residence shortly after the war, and George H. Pendleton, Brick Pomeroy, Andrew Johnson, and Emerson Etheridge, they will have done their level best to precipitate that catastrophe. Last Tuesday evening Andrew Johnson spoke at Knoxville, Tennessee, in the course of which he used these words, as printed in the Knoxville Press and Herald of Wednesday, the 18th of August:

There is a debt owing by the United States amounting to $2,600,000,000. The men who are engaged in the conspiracy to change this Government into an empire say that this debt was 'created to preserve the Republic.' Now, what is assumed? Simply that we must destroy this Republic for the purpose of paying the debt by converting the Republic into an empire. My countrymen, before God and this people to-night, I would rather that the Republic was preserved and the debt let go. [Loud cheers.] This debt was created to save the Republic. Now the Republic must be destroyed to pay the debt. Rather let the Government be preserved and let the debt go.

The election of Johnson to the United States Senate would be preferred by most of the Democratic leaders of the North, and on this platform. The election of Packer in Pennsylvania, and Pendleton in Ohio, would be the endorsement of this platform. Reputation was never so near the hearts of the Southern leaders as it is to-day, and Packer and Pendleton have always acted with these leaders.—The Press.

ASA PACKER.

The Germantown Telegraph—an independent paper—gives this history, political and otherwise, of the Democratic nominee for Governor:

For the high and responsible office of Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the Democratic party has nominated a man who is not a native of the State, nor distinguished for eminent ability of any kind in connection with public affairs. Asa Packer has been a member of the Legislature and also of Congress, but in both cases he was a silent member, without ability or influence, and the record of his public services is limited to votes in the affirmative or negative. If he ever drafted a bill of any importance we have never read of it. If he ever offered a record of any kind, or ever effected amendments of any consequence to any pending measure, his party friends have not yet shown the act, and we doubt whether they can do so. If he ever expressed his views on any questions of moment in language worthy of quotation, or to which his constituents could refer with pleasure or pride, it has yet to be
