Again: Many farmers have fields that must await the pleasure of Nature to fit them for thorough cultivation. Here is a field-sometimes a whole farm-which, it partially divested of the primitive forest, is still thickly dotted with obstinate stamps and filled with green, tenacious, roots, which could only be emoved at a heavy, perhaps ruinous cost. A rich man might order them all dug out in a month, and see his order fully obeyed; but, except to clear a spot for a garden or under very peculiar circumstances, it would not pay; and a poor man cannot afford to incur a heavy expense merely for appearance's sake, or t make a theatrical display of energy.
