No. 1. January 4, 1867.

A writer who should undertake to muse and instruct the reading public of the present day, would have a more difficult task to perform than had those wits and essayists of a hundred and fifty years ago, whose reputations, however lustrous then, grow more brilliant with each succeeding year, and whose volumes have become the acknowledged standards of periodical essays and of English purity of style. One reason for this is, that the average of information is greatly higher now than it was then; and the body of those who are accusmore numerous; and, though possessing less education, in a technical sense, having more general knowledge. A defect WILLIAM L. MADDOCK AND Co. in our educational system furnishes the dealers in fine groceries, No. 115 South

Philadelphia. Earl of Derby, making the best poetical translation of Homer ever produced; or, like the Hon. Mr. Gladstone writing a learned disquisition upon the same author, with specimens of translation? We do not make, at any of our universities, such scholars as are produced at the European colleges.

That our people have more general knowledge is mainly attributable to the WE think our readers will be able to newspapers, which are a never-failing source of delight, amusement and inthe hands of almost every household and being regularly perused by old and young there is acquired thereby a fund of information and a variety of suggestions, which were not heretofore generally accessible, and, affording food for thought, exercise and expansion of the many formation and appears to the control of the order to the form of the order to the order to the form of the order to the exercise and expansion of the mind. Nor exercise and expansion of the mind. Nor did the comparitively few newspapers uate in the township and county aforesaid.

The political pamreign made famous. The political pamphlet and the satirical poem were the ESTATE OF FREDERICK HESS, mediums through which the author of mediums through which the author or mediums through which the author or states man reached his peculiar class of Hendershot, both of whom are believed to be dead readers then; but now the politician or being the surface of the common through the surface of the common terminal liess, intermarried with both of whom the politician or being the surface of the common terminal liess, intermarried with the common terminal liess, intermarried with the common terminal liess, intermarried with the common terminal lies and the common terminal lies are the common terminal lies and the common terminal lies are the common terminal lies ar poet who desires to be read seeks the columns of the newspaper, and discusses with all his ability and eloquence the subject to which he addresses himself. So, we find its columns varying from And crack, the frost splitting some of them a considerable number of feet.
