a seam that is puckered, is to pucker a face that is straight. Little Tilda Tulip was one of that kind—the unkind kind. Sometimes her friends would ask what she would do if her face were to freeze in frowns, but her uncle Jack used to say that she was always too hot of freeze. But one evening she came o her uncle Jack with the usual frown o her uncle Jack with the usual frown showing him her new brocade doll dress, showing him her new brocade doll dress, a passion with her stockings, in dress-ting, the thought of the funny little old

"Just see, uncle Jack," she whined, that isn't spoiled somehow or other.
Isn' that too bad? This dress has been wrinkled for a week, and now it will never come smooth at all,"

"That's bad, surely," said uncle Jack "but there is something more than that. I know something of yours that is finer than that brocade silk, that is all in 'beggars' presses.'"

"Why.no, uncle Jack, I haven't anything so fine as this, you know, and now this is all puckered and wrinkled and krinkled, and what will I do"

"Give me your hand," said uncle Jack. Do you see that skin. There is no silk so fine as that. These chubby cheeks are covered with a skin that is tiner. But you have kept this skin your face." packered about your eyes and your forehead and the corners of your mouth : you have kept it puckered and wrinkled and krinkled as you say, till I am afraid it will never be straight. I don't think a hot iron would smooth it. Do

Now uncle Jack spoke very kindly, Indeed. There were no wrinkles in his voice. Some people have wrinkles in their words. But notwithstanding ber oncie's kindness, naughty little Tilda Tolip went off in a pout and declared that uncle Jack was "real mean. He never feels sorry for a body when they ere in trouble." And so she wrinkled ber voice into a whine, and wrinkled and puckered her face up most fright- said, soven years, is made thus: Take
