

THE COLUMBIAN AND DEMOCRAT, BLOOMSBURG, COLUMBIA COUNTY, PA.

FARMER'S COLUMN.

It Pays to Keep Good Stock. While the writer was recently riding in company with a well known stock proprietor...

The animal, a "Black Hawk," had failed eleven colts; seven of these had been sold for the aggregate of $8,400, and this had nearly cleared the farm of debt.

Similar examples can be found in every line of farm animals. A breeder of swine in Pennsylvania has realized a fortune in a few years by keeping the best.

The Tomato Worm. We do not believe people are sufficiently alarmed about the worm which last season, for the first time, we believe, made its appearance on tomato vines.

A gentleman of this city has within a day or two discovered these poisonous insects in his garden.

"Tomatoes in this vicinity are ripening daily, and people should be on their guard lest, in picking them, they should be poisoned by the worms which eat the vines of the tomato plants.

The dwarf nodded, and beckoned him to follow. Karl thought he should like to know a little about who it was that thus sought his company.

Karl saw twelve strange old figures among themselves very sociably with a game of nine-pins.

GRINDING HAY FOR FEED.—A writer in the Maine Farmer says: For some time past I have been making observations and experiments in animals' food...

Little by little Karl got bolder; and at last he plucked up his heart so far as to beg the dwarf, by signs, to let him, too, take his turn at the flagon.

Which was first, he or the knights, Karl never could tell, or whether the wine got the better of his head; but what he knows was, that sleep at last overpowered him, and that when he awoke he found himself stretched out upon the old spot within the walls where he had folded his cloak, and saw that the bright sun was high up in the heavens.

A GUEST at one of our hotels, the other evening, was discovered by the proprietor rather tenderly embracing the chambermaid.

THE YOUNG FOLKS.

Karl Katz. In the midst of the Hartz forests there is a high mountain, of which the neighbors tell all sorts of stories; how the goblins and faeries dance on it by night; and how the old Emperor Redbeard holds his court there, and sits on his marble throne, with his long beard sweeping on the ground.

A great many years ago there lived in a village at the foot of this mountain one Karl Katz. Now Karl was a goatherd, and every morning he drove his flock to feed upon the green spots that are here and there found on the mountain's side.

Just then he saw that rattled about his ears like a hail-storm, could come from; but all overhead was dark, and he could find no clue to this strange business.

At last, as he stood listening, he thought he heard the neighing and stamping of horses.

He was sure that horses were feeding about him, and that the corn fell from their mangers.

He turned round, and he saw a little dwarf, who looked like a goblin, and who was dressed in a very queer way.

Simply obeying the rules of the house," said the groom, "I had to card back to the room door."
