Representative Reform.

THE subject of representative reform is one that is attracting a great deal of attention, both in America and in some of the European states. In our own state, the present is a most opportune time for people to think about it. Our constitutional convention is called for the express purpose of digesting and organizing public reforms. Reforms in our judiciary system, our legislative system, our systems of local administration, and our representative system, constitute the leading general objects upon which the convention will be expeeted to act.

It should be remembered that the present is not the first fime that the necessity of an improvement in our electoral system has been felt. The first plan or electing representatives that was introduced in this country was what is known as the "general ticket" plan-the same that still provails in choosing electors for president and vice. president. By this plan, the political majority in a state, organized as a party, secured to itself the onlire representation of the state, and the minority were wholly excluded from representation. The wrong was so obvious that congress interposed, and by statute required the states to select their congressional representatives by single districts, each district choosing one member. This was the first representative reform after the foundation of the republic. The single district plan was a great improvement upon the general ticket plan; it "ameborated our electoral system, and was an unquestionable advance in the art of government among us.' But the mischievous majority rule, and a restricted ballot, were retained, so that the evil which had before compre hended the whole state still existed in the several districts. The minority in each district were as completely disfranchised under the single district plan as the minerity in the whole state had been under the general ticket plan. The corruption which had been practiced under the general ticket plan was, and is, still practiced under the single district plan, and the latter has, besides, called into existence evils peculiar to itself, and which did not attach to the former plan.

The reform now demanded is one that shall do away with the evils of both the general ticket and single district plans, and secure a fair and just representation of all political interests, in proportion to the respective numbers of their advo-

In the United States senate, last Janurry, a bill was introduced to inaugarate this important reform in the election of congressmen. It was referred to a committee, consisting of Senators Buckalew, Anthony, Wade, Morton, Ferry, Rice, and Warner. After a care-
