

FARMER'S COLUMN.

Poultry and Poultry Houses.

The Massachusetts Bloughman says that "there seems to be a general belief that great numbers of fowls cannot be kept together in confinement unless they have an extensive area, but that is an error, for we have proved to our satisfaction, that with good ventilation, a variety of food, pure water, light and dry quarters, and cleanliness, poultry can be kept in contracted limits in great numbers. We have in mind at present a flock of over seven hundred fowls which have a square covering but about six hundred square feet, and yard to correspond, and they are all in good health."

The writer then shows that abundant ventilation, a variety of food of grains and seed should be furnished, together with an abundance of green food, which must replace the grass that the fowls eat in great quantities. Animal food, to replace the insects which the bird picks up abundantly in foraging—in short, all the elements must be provided for poultry in confinement that they would find in nature. Pure water is another great essential, and is absolutely a necessity; probably nothing can be worse for poultry than filthy or unclean water, or that they are permitted to provide themselves with, and we can trace to this cause, undoubtedly, the epidemics which sometimes depopulate the poultry yards. The water should be changed at least twice a day, and it may be made to answer a double purpose if run through a strainer into the drinking vessels, which are well rusted, to all others. If clear running water can be introduced into the yards, it is most desirable. Where a small brook is attainable, its course may be often turned into the edge of the yard with great advantage.

Light, dryness, and cleanliness of floor, walls and nests is absolutely necessary. The droppings should never be allowed to accumulate, the walls should be whitewashed frequently, and the nests cleaned out and changed often. Lice and vermin increase and multiply astonishingly fast in neglected henneries, and poultry suffer from their attacks terribly. There are cases on record of fowls actually dying from the attacks of lice. The nests should be made of short straw, or hay, or what is better, if obtainable, tobacco stem and refuse, in which lice obtain no refuge. Moss nests are also desirable, but like hay nests should be powdered with sulphur or lime occasionally. Boxes or trays filled with fine earth and ashes should be provided for the poultry to bathe in, which should be frequently renewed. That poultry husbandry is and can be made profitable has been repeatedly demonstrated; but like all other industries, it can be followed only when proper attention and intelligence are exercised in its management.

Walks and Talks on the Farm.

A farmer, I say, needs pluck. Capital is very desirable, but pluck is worth more to a farmer than capital. A little capital and a good deal of pluck is what is wanted. "Times are hard," but what of that? People must eat and it is our business to raise the food. We do not raise any too much. It is not pleasant to find that what we expected to get $2.00 for, will bring only $1.00. But all business is subject to such fluctuations, and we are, on the whole, no worse off than other people. I was at the West one when corn was worth only 10 cents a bushel; and many days the wheat at bank-bills in circulation were not worth over 50 cents on the dollar. The bottom seemed to have dropped out of everything. I expected to see the farmers thoroughly disheartened. Not a bit of it. They "kept right on," working harder and faster, if possible, than before. In less than two years from that time, corn was worth $1 per bushel, and the farmers who went ahead got their reward. It will be the same again. There will be a sharp reaction in prices, and I should not be surprised if it comes before another harvest. But at any rate all the food we can raise will be wanted. Most of us will lose money this year. We have paid too high wages, but if we can correct this mistake next year. For my part I have made up my mind not to have a single extra day's work done before next May, unless I can get it done for a dollar. At that price I would do anything that needs to be done in the way of permanent improvement, and give any man who is willing to work an opportunity to do so. The country cannot afford to have me idle. But if they demand exorbitant wages we have no other alternative but to stop every kind of work that is not absolutely necessary to be done.

THE YOUNG FOLKS.

Hansel and Gretel.

There they were again told to sit down by a large fire, and go to sleep; and the woodman and his wife said they would come in the evening and fetch them away. In the afternoon Hansel shared Gretel's bread, because he had strewed all his upon the road; but the day passed away, and evening passed away too, and no one came to the poor children. Still Hansel comforted Gretel, and said, "Wait till the crumbs of bread which I have strewed, and they will show us the way home." The moon rose; but when Hansel looked for the crumbs that were gone, for hundreds of little birds in the wood had found them and picked them up. Hansel, however, set out to try and find his way home; but they soon lost themselves in the wilderness, and next day on through the night and all the next day, till at last they laid down and fell asleep for weariness. Another day they went on as before, but still did not come to the end of the wood; and they were as hungry as could be, for they had nothing to eat.
