Original Poetry.
John Greaves.
BY HARLES B. BROCKWAY.
You are witty, you are keen, you're gallant as ever was seen,
And in your own conceit, you are very wise,
John Greaves,
You are handsome, too, I vow, with an intellectual brow
And a pair of wondrous, mischief-making eyes,
John Greaves,
You've a love of a mousetrap—and also a love for cash,
And still a greater love have you for yourself,
John Greaves;
You admire a pair of eyes like as I faintly remember, but a greater admiration, have you for me,
John Greaves.
And still more than anything, you adore the Chloroform.
Though he eat you much of turbulence and strife, John Greaves;
You are kind of worldly show, and would like,
where you go,
A full pipe to carry with you through this life, John Greaves.
You would like a fair young bride—to sit gravely by your side—
One whose beauty should do credit to your taste, John Greaves—With fair share of common sense, finer share of egotism,
That should keep your wife from running after
to waste, John Greaves.
You would like a coach and four, and a hall with marble floor,
You would like to dwell in lofty, regal walls,
John Greaves,
You would like to live at ease, and to do what you please,
And, at last, to lie beneath a costly pall, John Greaves.
You may make your hundred thousand—may win the smiles, and how-and All the favors that this world extends to
"ease," John Greaves;
If you sell your soul for gold, to King Lear give yourself,
Trust a costly pall will save you, at the last,
John Greaves?

Miscellaneous.
UNPARALLELED ADVENTURE
OF ONE
HANS PFAALL.
In the sides of the covering thus adjusted around the car, had been inserted three circular panes of thick but clear glass, through which I could see without difficulty around me in every horizontal direction. In that portion of the cloth forming the bottom, was like a fourth window, of the same kind, and corresponding with a small aperture in the floor of the car itself.
This enabled me to see perpendicularly down, but having found it impossible to place any similar contrivance overhead, on account of the peculiar manner of its closing up the opening there, and the consequent wrinkles in the cloth, I could expect to see no objects situated directly in my zenith. This, of course, was a matter of little consequence; for had I even been able to place a window at top, the balloon itself would have prevented my making any use of it.
About a foot below one of the side windows was a circular opening, three inches in diameter, and fitted with a brass rim adapted in its inner edge to the windings of a screw. In this rim was screwed the large tube of the condenser, the body of the machine being,
of course, within the chamber of gum-elastic. Through this tube a quantity of the rare atmosphere circumscribed being drawn by means of a vacuum created in the body of the machine, was thence discharged, in a state of condensation, into the chamber. This operation, being repeated several times, at length filled the chamber with atmosphere proper for all the purposes of respiration. But in so confined a space it would, in a short time, necessarily become foul, and unfit for use from frequent contact with the lungs.
It was then ejected by a small valve at the bottom of the car;—the dense air readily sinking into the thinner atmosphere below. To avoid the inconvenience of making a total vacuum at any moment within the chamber, this purification was never accomplished all at once, but in a gradual manner,—the valve being opened only for a few seconds, then closed again, until one or two strokes from the pump of the condenser had supplied the place of the atmosphere ejected. For the sake of an experiment I had put the cat and kittens in a small basket, and suspended it outside the car at a button at the bottom, close by the valve, through which I could feel them at any moment when necessary. I did this at some little risk, and before closing the mouth of the chamber, by reaching under the bottom of the car, I had placed a small bucket which I had fastened to the rim, and which I had filled with water.
The bucket was suspended by a cord from the top of the car, and I had fastened to it a small earthen pitcher which I had filled with water. The bucket was suspended by a cord from the top of the car, and I had fastened

HANS PFAALL.
In the sides of the covering thus ad-
aperture in the floor of the car itself.
This enabled me to see perpendicularly
down, but having found it impossible
head, on account of the peculiar manner of its closing up the opening there,
and the consequent wrinkles in the cloth,
I could expect to see no objects situated
directly in my zenith. This, of course,
was a matter of little consequence; for
had I even been able to place a window
prevented my making any use of it.
brass rim adapted in its inner edge to
the windings of a screw. In this rim
was screwed the large tube of the con-
denser, the body of the machine being,
of course, within the chamber of gum-
elastic. Through this tube a quantity
of the rare atmosphere circumscribed
thence discharged, in a state of condensation, into the chamber. This operation,
filled the chamber with atmosphere
proper for all the purposes of respira-
frequent contact with the lungs.
It was then ejected by a small valve
readily sinking into the thinner atmosphere below. To avoid the inconveni-
moment within the chamber, this puri-
valve being opened only for a few sec-
two strokes from the pump of the con-
tens in a small basket, and suspended
it outside the car at a button at the bottom, close by the valve, through which
necessary. I did this at some little risk,
and before closing the mouth of the
chamber, by reaching under the bottom of the car, I had placed a small
bucket which I had fastened to the
rim, and which I had filled with water.
from the top of the car, and I had
fastened to it a small earthen pitcher

ERRORS OF YOUTH.
A gentleman who suffered for years from Nervous debility, premature decay, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will be glad to testify to the efficacy of the above medicine in restoring him to health and vigor. He feels that he owes it to his fellow sufferers to publish his experience, and to state that he has been cured by the use of the above medicine. He has been cured by the use of the above medicine. He has been cured by the use of the above medicine.

Original Poetry.
John Greaves.
BY HARLES B. BROCKWAY.
You are witty, you are keen, you're gallant as
ever was seen,
And in your own conceit, you are very wise,
John Greaves,
You are handsome, too, I vow, with an intellectual brow
And a pair of wondrous, mischief-making eyes,
John Greaves,
You've a love of a mousetrap—and also a love for
cash,
And still a greater love have you for yourself,
John Greaves;
You admire a pair of eyes like as I faintly remember, but a greater admiration, have you for me,
John Greaves.
And still more than anything, you adore the Chloroform.
Though he eat you much of turbulence and
strife, John Greaves;
You are kind of worldly show, and would like,
where you go,
A full pipe to carry with you through this
life, John Greaves.
You would like a fair young bride—to sit gravely
by your side—
One whose beauty should do credit to your
taste, John Greaves—
With fair share of common sense, finer share of
egotism,
That should keep your wife from running after
to waste, John Greaves.
You would like a coach and four, and a hall with
marble floor,
You would like to dwell in lofty, regal walls,
John Greaves,
You would like to live at ease, and to do what
you please,
And, at last, to lie beneath a costly pall, John Greaves.
You may make your hundred thousand—may
win the smiles, and how-and
All the favors that this world extends to
"ease," John Greaves;
If you sell your soul for gold, to King Lear give
yourself,
Trust a costly pall will save you, at the last,
John Greaves?
