Still sits the schoolhouse by the road,

Within, the master's desk is seen, Deep scarred by raps official; The warping floor, the battered seats, The jack-knife's carved initial;

Its door's worn sill, betraying The feet that, creeping slow to school, Went storming out to playing! Long years ago a winter's sun

It touched the tangled golden curis, And brown eyes full of grieving, Of one who still her steps delayed ben all the school were leaving

For near her stood the little boy Her childish favor singled, His cap pulled low upon a face Where pride and shame were mingled Pushing with restless feet the snow

He saw her lift her eyes; he felt The soft hand's light caressing. And heard the trembling of her voice, As if a fault confessing.

Still memory to a gray-haired man

That sweet child-face is showing. Dear girl! the grasses on her grave Have forty years been growing! He lives to learn, in life's hard school.

IN THE WRONG ROOM: Nat. Harrison's Experience.

"In early days old Nat. Harrison was elected to the Legislature from this county," said a fellow as we were all scated around the stove, in a little hotel at Mc Lainsboro', Hamilton county, Illinois. Old Nat. was a regular old brick! He was elected just because there was no

An Exciting Scene. The peregrinations of showmen are often beset with numerous difficulties while pursuing their daily avocations in our Southern country, which with the usual winter rains and heavy roads, make it difficult for the managers to make good the promises of the agents. Such was the case with John Robinson's Circus and Menagerie a few days since. While performing in Tallahassa, Florida, it was mentioned to J. F. Rob inson, Jr., that he might expect some lifficulty in passing through a long and dismal swamp between that place and Quincy, on account of the large numper of alligators who infested the ford at this particular locality, and who are at this season of the year very ferocious, and on the watch for any unfortunate mule or horse that may become entan gled in the numerous roots, quicksands and holes which abound at the ford : but he replied, as the agent had already made the arrangements for him to go through, and it was not his nature to turn back, he had nothing left but to follow, trusting to his previous good fortune in getting thus far. The result of his decision although anticipating some difficulty, was far more serious than he anticipated. At three o'clock, p. m., on Tuesday, January 25, Prof. Louis Houston, who has charge of the animals, started with the elephant Empress, the large Bactrian camel, the beautiful Arabian white camel, a fine thorough bred mare and colt, and two spotted coach dogs, to make the trip to Quincy, although repeatedly warned by Mr. J. F. Robbinson, jr., not to attempt the passage of the swamp in any other than daythe tube in order to prevent the coagulight. He, however, went through .-Before appreaching the ford, an occasional bellow or roar was heard, betokening that the inhabitants of the locality had not retired for the night, and a sudden plunge and splash in the water would denote that the enemy was on the alert for mischief. The elephant would, every few steps, throw her trunk aloft, emitting at the same time a loud screach of defiance, the camels uttering low moans, while the horses almost refused to stir, and stood trembling with fear, while the dogs kept up an incessant howling. Approaching the water at the ford, Houston determined upon the immediate passage through, before the alligators had time to summon their crew.

Bidding the elephant enter, she steptacked.

A canula or short tube with a stop cock was inserted into the vein, the stop cock being for the purpose of preventing the ingress of air. A syringe, holding about an ounce, was filled with the defibrinated blood, and discharged into the vein. The effect was immedlately perceptible in the perspiration of the dog; at the third syringe full, the heart began to beat receptibly, and shortly afterward the dog winked; when about half of the extracted blood had been restored, the beast astonished the audience by getting up on his four feet and looking about the room.

Dr. Freer proceeded to explain the ieleterious effects of air in the blood. Air in the lungs was necessary to the performance of the life functions; but ment the restoration of the animal by the injecting of the fluid in the mortar

It was supposed by some persons present that the experimenter would repair the severed vein and artery, stitch up the dog's neck, and let him convalesce, and remain a monument of inductive science: Dr. Freer intimated that the dog would live if properly cared for; but as it was not of much account, and science could be advanced by the death of the brute, he would proceed to put it to death in the most scientific manner possible, in truth, he would give a specimen of murder as a fine art, which even De Quincy never imagined.

air in the blood was deadly poison. The canula had been used to prevent air from getting into the veins; the syringe had been carefully filled to the very point, so that no air could possibly be ejected. Introduce a few globules of air into the blood, and syncope and death follow. The blood after death. from this cause, is found in a frothy condition.
