THE YOUNG FOLKS. A Colorado Story.

(Concluded.)

Where were they? Alas! they did not thomselves know. They only knew that they had been awakend suddenly by a thump and that when they jumped out of the canoe and started togo home, everything was different. There was no foot path, no clearing where the tree had been cut down, no sound of father's axe near by, nor of mother's song-and the stream was rushing on very angrily over its rocky bed .- The canoe, which had been broken loose and, borne by the current, floated away with them miles and miles from the stake, was wedged between two great stones when they jumped out of it; but now it was gonethe waters had taken it away. After a while in their wanderings, they could not even find the stream, though it seemed to be roaring in every direction around them.

Now they were in the depths of the forest, wandering about, tired, hungry, and frightened. Two nights they cried themselves to sleep in each other's arms under the treestand as the wind moaned again. through the branches, Winnie had prayed God to save them from the wolves and the Indians and little Nat creamed, "Papa! Mamma!" sobbing as scrap book? Then it would have been if his heart would break. All they had permanently saved and very convenient found to cat was a few red berries that for reference. Preserving papers in files would save all the articles, but few grow close to the ground.-Every hour the poor children grew fainter, and, at last, Nat coludn't walk at all.

"I'm too tired and sick," he said, "and my feet's all tut. My toos and tockies is in the boat. O Winnie! Winnie!" he would cry, with a great sob, "why don't mamma'u papa come! Oh! if mamma'd only come and bring me some bread!"

"Don't cry,dear," Winnie would say, over and over again. "I'll find some more red berries soon; and God will show us the way home. I know he will. Only don't cry Nat, because it takes away all my courage."

"All your what?" asked Nat, looking wildly at her, as if he thought courage was something they could eat. "All my courage, Nat." And then.

after searching in vain for more red berries, she would throw herself upon her knees and moan :

"Dear Father in Heaven. I can't find anything more for Nat to eat. Oh! please show us the way home!"

What was that quick sound coming toward them? The underbrush was so thick Winnie could not see what caused it, but she held her breath in terror, thinking of wolves and Indians, for there were plenty of both, she knew, lurking about in these great forests. The soud ceased for a moment. mixing in the course of a year. Just the right thing in the right place often Seizing Nat in her arms, she made one saves dollars of money, and dollars' more frantic efforts to find her way to worth of time and trouble. The man pulled a canteen or flat tin flask from his belt and gave her a swallow of water; then he hastened to moisten Nat's lips and feed him crumb after crumb of broken biscuit.

"Another hour," he muttered to himself, as he gently fed the boy and smoothed back the tangled yellow hair from the pale little face, "another hour and he had been past mendin."

Winnie looked up quickly. "Is he going to die?" she asked.

"Not he," said the man, "he'll come through right end up yet. He's got a fever on him, but we'll soon knock that under. How'd you get here, my little?"

Winnie told her story, all the while feeling a glad certainty at her heart that their troubles were over. The stranger carried a gun and he had a big pistol and an ax and a knife in his belt. He looked very fierce, too, yet she knew he would not harm her. She had seen many a trapper before since she came to the West, and though this man looked very grand and wore a wonder-ful hunting dress all embroidered and fringed, and a hat and yellow leggings, she felt sure he was the very trapper who had been at her father's cabin a liable to shell than common oats, when few weeks before and taken supper and too ripe. warmed himself before the fire," while he told wonderful stories about Indians and furs, and about having many a time had "fifty miles of traps out on one stretch."

She remembered, too, that her father had told her the next day that trappers the art of roasting coffee, then buy it lived by catching with traps all sorts of wild animals and selling their furs to the traders, and that this particular trapper had been very successful, and had great influence among the Indians -one of the big men of Colorado, as he said.
