Oh! Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud.
The following lines have been sent us for publication in the "Choice Poetry" column, and are inserted at the request of the author.
Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud? Like a withering flower, a fading leaf, or a bubble on the sea, or a little drop of water, which the sun has dried, or a little speck of dust, which the wind has blown, or a little breath of air, which the wind has scattered, or a little spark of fire, which the wind has blown, or a little drop of blood, which the heart has shed, or a little tear, which the eye has shed, or a little sigh, which the heart has shed, or a little thought, which the mind has shed, or a little word, which the tongue has shed, or a little deed, which the hand has done, or a little life, which the soul has lived, or a little death, which the body has died, or a little resurrection, which the spirit has lived, or a little glory, which the soul has won, or a little crown, which the king has worn, or a little throne, which the king has sat on, or a little scepter, which the king has held, or a little kingdom, which the king has ruled, or a little empire, which the king has governed, or a little world, which the king has created, or a little universe, which the king has made, or a little God, which the king has worshipped, or a little heaven, which the king has enjoyed, or a little hell, which the king has feared, or a little eternity, which the king has lived, or a little infinity, which the king has known, or a little nothing, which the king has been, or a little something, which the king has done, or a little everything, which the king has become, or a little God, which the king has been, or a little heaven, which the king has enjoyed, or a little hell, which the king has feared, or a little eternity, which the king has lived, or a little infinity, which the king has known, or a little nothing, which the king has been, or a little something, which the king has done, or a little everything, which the king has become.

FAUNTLEROY, THE FORGER.
BY WILKIE COLLINS.
What I am going to tell you, gentlemen, happened when I was a very young man, and when I was just setting up in business on my own account.
My father had been well acquainted for many years with Mr. Fauntleroy, of the famous London banking firm of Marsh, Stracey, Fauntleroy and Graham. Thinking it might be of some future service to me to make my position known to a great man in the commercial world, my father mentioned to his highly respected friend that I was about to start in business for myself in a very small way, and with very little money. Mr. Fauntleroy received the intimation with a kind appearance of interest, and said he would have his eye on me. I expected from this that he would wait until I had got my legs at starting, and that if he found I succeeded pretty well, he would then help me forward if it lay in his power. As events turned out he proved to be a far better friend than that, and he soon showed me that I had very much underrated the hearty and generous interest which he had felt in my welfare from the first.

Choice Poetry.
Oh! Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud.
The following lines have been sent us for publication in the "Choice Poetry" column, and are inserted at the request of the author.
Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud? Like a withering flower, a fading leaf, or a bubble on the sea, or a little drop of water, which the sun has dried, or a little speck of dust, which the wind has blown, or a little breath of air, which the wind has scattered, or a little spark of fire, which the wind has blown, or a little drop of blood, which the heart has shed, or a little tear, which the eye has shed, or a little sigh, which the heart has shed, or a little thought, which the mind has shed, or a little word, which the tongue has shed, or a little deed, which the hand has done, or a little life, which the soul has lived, or a little death, which the body has died, or a little resurrection, which the spirit has lived, or a little glory, which the soul has won, or a little crown, which the king has worn, or a little throne, which the king has sat on, or a little scepter, which the king has held, or a little kingdom, which the king has ruled, or a little empire, which the king has governed, or a little world, which the king has created, or a little universe, which the king has made, or a little God, which the king has worshipped, or a little heaven, which the king has enjoyed, or a little hell, which the king has feared, or a little eternity, which the king has lived, or a little infinity, which the king has known, or a little nothing, which the king has been, or a little something, which the king has done, or a little everything, which the king has become.
