Choice Poetry.

The Toast.
The following is one of the finest productions of the late Sir Walter Scott, and we are inclined to believe that it can not be read without causing the blood to tingle.
The feast is over! Now bring me wine In loudly e'en is seen to shine Before each eager guest;
And silence fills the crowded hall, As deep as when the herald's call Thrills in the royal breast.
Then up arose the noble host And smiling cried, "A toast! a toast!" To all our ladies fair.
Here, before all, I pledge the name Of Stanton's proud and beautiful dame-- The Lady Gwendolore!
Then to his feet each gallant sprung, And joyous was the shout that rung As Stanton gave the word:
And every eye was raised on high, Nor ceased the loud and gladsome cry, "Thou Stanton's wife was heard."
"Enough, enough," he smiling said, And lowly bent his languid head,
"That all may have their due, Now each in turn must play his part,
And pledge the lady of his heart, Like gallant knight and true!"
Then one by one each guest sprang up And strove in turn the brimming cup.
And named the loved one's name,
And each, as hand on high he raised, His lady's grace would fervently praise.
Her constancy and name.
"Thy name is Stanton's true to rise; Oh, kin to me that I have under my saddle cloth a sum of two hundred pounds sterling."
"Two hundred pounds sterling!" cried the robber, while his eyes sparkled through his mask.
"But if thou art good as thou art kind," replied the Quaker, "thou wilt leave me this money. I wish to establish my daughter, and this sum is necessary; for a long time I shall not have a similar sum at my disposal. The dear child loveth her intended, and it will be cruel to delay this union. Thou hast loved, ventured, and thou wouldest not commit this wicked act." "What care I for your daughter, and her lover and their marriage? Less talk, and more promptitude of execution! I must have this money." Toby, with a sigh, lifted the cloth, took a bag heavy enough, and passed it slowly to the masked man. His intention then was to gallop off.
"Stop again, friend Quaker," said the other laying his hand upon the bridle; "as soon as you arrive, you will denounce me to the magistrates. This is according to order. I have nothing to say; but I must have the advance of the process of to-night, at least. My mare is feeble, and in besides, fatigued; your horse, on the contrary, appears vigorous, for the weight of this bag does not incommode him. Alight and I give me your beast; you may take mine, if you will."
He was slow in beginning to comply, because these cross exigencies were of a nature to raise the choler of the most patient man. The good Toby, however, descended, and resignedly took the sorry jade which was left him in exchange. "If I had known," he contented himself in thinking, "I would have fled at the first encounter with his rascal, and certainly I am not with this course that he would have gained his race."
During this time the masked man ironically thanking him for his compliance, applied both spurs and disappeared.
Before he reached London, Toby had time to reflect on his misfortune, and the chagrin of the two young persons who loved, and whose happiness would be perpetrated the image of her who was so dear to him, he had caused the artist to come to the bed of death. It was there that Edward saw the desolate damsel; it was there a serious first love took place, amid the tears of one and the pious work of the other. The year which elapsed after this epoch had but strengthened the bond formed under these auspices, and the young man had showed to the father both his desire and hope.
The excellent Toby had no reason whatever for opposing the mutual inclinations of the two young persons.
Without being rich, Edward earned, by means of his pencil, what suffered to support a family honorably. His father, Mr. Weresford, an old merchant of the city, had retired from business with a fortune increased more than ten fold. This was a rare example of rapid success in speculation--so rapid indeed that few were able to follow its progress.
Yet Weresford, of so blunt and stern disposition, lived alone in a suburb of London, and without caring what his son was doing, left him entirely at liberty. He was one of those accommodating egotists who trouble no one provided they trouble not them--persons of perfect complaisance if you ask nothing of them.
Edward, therefore, could without interruption, court his pretty Quakeress, well assured that his father would never think of opposing his marriage. The situation of the loving couple was, to all appearance, very prosperous; and honest Toby did not put off the day of their marriage longer than to collect the arrangements of his rents; he destined the money for the extraordinary expense of matrimony. For the purpose he went to his country seat, some miles from London, in order to regulate his affairs. He had passed but one day from home; and as he was about to put up his horse for the night, he perceived at some distance a horseman, who had barred the road. He stopped uncertain whether to go on or turn back.
Meanwhile the horseman advanced towards him. The Quaker could not even think of escaping; he therefore put on a good face, and brought his horse to a walk. In approaching the man who barred his way, he perceived that he was masked, a grievous agony, which was soon confirmed.
The unknown showed a pistol and directed the muzzle to the traveller, demanding his purse. The Quaker did not want courage, but calm by character, inoffensive by religion, and even unable, without arms, to resist an armed man, he pulled from his pocket several pieces, and left the poor man whom he had stopped, to pass on, while he put his horse to the trot. But the robber,

Miscellaneous.

THE QUAKER AND THE ROBBER.
TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY R. E. A.
ATKIN.
The most honest of all Quakers, Toby Simpson, lived in London, in a pleasant little dwelling graced by the presence of his daughter Mary. She was not quite seventeen years of age; she was charmingly fair; had blue eyes, and possessed as much modesty as beauty.
All the young men of her father's acquaintance were her suitors; all those of the neighborhood sought to gain her notice. Vain efforts! Mary was no co-quette, and instead of enjoying the effect produced by her charms, she was ever on account of the manners of all her admirers, except one Edward Weresford, a young artist, admitted to the intimacy of the family.
A very simple event had caused this friendship. A premature death had carried off the Quaker's wife. She was young and beautiful; and desiring to perpetuate the image of her who was
to come to the bed of death. It was
