Usually, in profane history, the only ights which have been shown us, were ter by throwing stones. This style of amusement is much in vogue with the youngstors and should be stopped. Messrs, Robbins & Eyer some time since suffered a loss of nearly $100 from the breaking of one of their large plate glass windows, caused by stone throwrights, and religious tolerations, were either entirely forgetten, or not consided worthy of even a passing notice ; but when the long preparing disaffection breaks out into open rebellion, then the historian seizes the pen, and the painter his pencil, and the events of the hour are chronicled, perhaps faithfully, often, however, with a party prejudice. Until very lately, we have been left in darkness, forced to grope our way amid our many conjectures, ignorant as to the causes of well known events, or the first illegal encroachments, which led to certain results disastrous to despotism, but glorous to liberty. We are happy to say, that for profane history a brighter day is dawning. The mantle of Clio has fallen upon the shoulders of Motley, of Irving, of Prescott, of Macaulay, and of Hallam. In them we find much of the philosophy of history, we are made acquainted with the deep and latent cause, with the very founda-tion and material of history, as well as from the net that this wretched piller-er did not leave enough butter for the morning's meal. In view of this fact, Mr. Grotz feels impelled to request one of three things; either a discontinuance of such visits altogether, a selection of some other night than that of Saturday, (as no stores are onen on Sunday mornthe natural and incidental results of those causes. It is not merely the naked facts, connected with a particular transaction, but also the cause, which makes history valuable.
