Original Poetry.

Long Ago.

BY RAYES.

What thought the voice he spoken,
And the measure moonlight,
Though low the words he spoken,
To me the music's sweet,
For 'tis my heart that's singing
The song I used to love,
And my memory that's bringing
The thoughts of long ago.

Though time seems slowly moving,
Yet many years have fled
Since loved and truly loving
My life and I were wed.
The marks of time's rude finger
Are traced upon my brow,
And now with age's duty
Of the days of long ago.

We've seen our days of sorrow,
And nights of deepest gloom,
Yet sunshine came to-morrow
And brightened up our home;
And now with age's duty
We seek our old to know,
And leave both youth and beauty
To the days of long ago.

Our children, some have left us
And other names have found,
Of some hath death been found,
We've laid them in the ground;
And sometimes we feel lonely
As we journey here and there,
For there are two of us,
As it was long ago.

Though old, we still are trying
To reach the blissful goal,
The land where none are dying,
And our circle will be small,
Enriched with his great treasure,
We our Redeemer know,
This gives us greater pleasure,
Than the thoughts of long ago.

Faith.

If faith came not to hold our hand,
How easy we should be,
Wandering along the lone some strand
That bounds the narrow sea,
While one by one our best-beloved
Pass on, dear Lord, to thee,
She walks with us, and holds our hand--
Her eyes are angels' eyes;
She walks with us across the sand,
Sweet faith that leads us on--
Sweet faith that leads us on--
That smiles of paradise.

Miscellaneous.

DEAF SMITH,

The Celebrated Texan Spy.

About two years after the Texan revolution, a difficulty occurred between the new government and a portion of the people, which threatened the most serious consequences--even the bloodshed and horrors of a civil war. Briefly, the cause was this: The constitution had fixed the city of Austin as the permanent capital, where the public archives were to be kept, with a reservation, however, of a power in the President in case of danger from the inroad of a foreign enemy, or a force of a sudden insurrection.

Conceiving that the exception emergency had arrived, as the Comanches frequently committed outrages within sight of the capitol itself, Houston, who resided at Washington, on the Brazos, dispatched an order commanding his subordinate functionaries to send the State Records to the latter place which he declared to be, pro tempore, the seat of government.

It is impossible to describe the stormy excitement which the promulgation of this fiat raised in Austin. The keepers of hotels, boarding houses, groceries and faro banks, were thunderstruck, maddened to frenzy; for the measure would be a death-blow to their prosperity in business, and accordingly they determined at once to take the necessary steps to avert the danger, by opposing the execution of Houston's mandate. They called a meeting of the citizens and farmers of the circumference country, who were all more or less interested in the question; and after many fiery speeches against the asserted tyranny of the administration, it was unanimously resolved to prevent the removal of the archives by open and armed resistance. To that end they organized a company of four hundred armed men, one party of whom, relieving the other at regular periods of duty should keep constant guard around the State House until the period passed by the mandate of the President.

The commander of this force was one Col. Morton, who had achieved considerable renown in the war for independence, and had still more recently displayed his bravery in two desperate duels, in both of which he cut his antagonists nearly to pieces with the bowie knife. Indeed, from the notoriety of his character for revenge or courage, it was thought that President Houston would renounce his purpose touching the archives as soon as he should learn who was the leader of the opposition.

Morton, on his part, whose vanity fully equalled his personal prowess, encouraged and justified the prevailing opinion by his boastful threats. He swore that if the President did succeed in removing the records by the march of an overpowering force, he would then himself hunt him down like a tiger and shoot him with little ceremony or stab him in his bed, or waylay him in his walks for recreation. He even wrote to the hero of San Jacinto to that effect. The latter replied in a note of laconic brevity:--

"If the people of Austin do not send the archives, I shall certainly come and take them, and if Col. Morton can kill me he is welcome to my ear."

On the reception of this answer the guard was doubled around the State House. Chosen sentinels were stationed along the road leading to the capitol, the military paraded the streets from morning till night, and select caucuses held permanent sessions, in the city hall. In short, everything betokened a coming tempest.

One day, while matters were in this precarious condition, the caucus at the city hall was surprised by the sudden appearance of a stranger, whose mode of entering was as extraordinary as his looks and dress. He did not knock at the closed door--he did not seek admission at all; but climbing unseen a small bushy-topped live oak, which grew beside the wall, leaped without sound or warning through a lofty window. He was clothed altogether in buckskin, carried a long and very heavy rifle in his hand, wore at the bottom of his left suspender a large bowie-knife, and had in his belt a couple of pistols half the length of his gun. He was tall, straight as an arrow, active as a panther in his motion, with darkened complexion and luxuriant jetty hair, with a severe iron-like countenance, that seemed never to have known a smile, and eyes of intense vivid black, wild and rolling, and his piercing as the point of a dagger. His strange advent inspired a thrill of involuntary fear, and many present unconsciously grasped the handles of their side-arms.

"Who are you that thus presume to intrude among gentlemen, without invitation?" demanded Col. Morton, fiercely essaying to cow down the stranger with his eye.

The latter returned his stare with compound interest, and laid his long bowie-knife on his lip as a sign--but of what the spectators could not imagine. "Who are you? Speak! or I will cut an answer out of your heart!" shouted Morton, almost distracted with rage by the cool, sneering gaze of the other, who now moved his finger from his lip and laid it on the hilt of his monstrous knife.

The fiery colonel then drew his dagger, and was in the act of advancing upon the stranger, when several might him and held him back, remonstrating. "Let him alone, Morton, for God's sake. Do you not perceive that is crazy?"

At that moment, Judge Webb, a man of shrewd intellect and courteous manners, stepped forward and addressed the intruder in a most respectful manner. "My good friend, I presume you have made a mistake in the house. This is a private meeting where none but members are admitted."

The stranger did not appear to comprehend the words, but he could not fail to understand the mild and deprecating manner. His rigid features relaxed, and moving to a table in the centre of the hall, where there were mats and implements of writing, he seized a pen and traced a line: "I am deaf." He then held it up before the spectators, as a sort of natural apology for his own want of politeness.

Judge Webb took the paper and wrote a question: "Dear sir, will you be so obliging as to inform us what is your business with the present meeting?"

The other responded by delivering a letter inscribed on the back, "To the citizens of Austin." They broke the seal and read it aloud. It was from Houston, and showed the usual terse brevity of his style:--

" Fellow Citizens,-- Though in error, and deceived by the arts of traitors, I will give you three more days to decide whether you will surrender the public archives. At the end of that time you will please let me know your decision. SAM. HOUSTON."

After the reading, the deaf man waited a few seconds, as if for reply, and then turned, and was about to leave the hall when Col. Morton interposed and sternly beckoned him back to the table. The stranger obeyed, and Morton wrote: "You were brave enough to insult me; you were brave enough now to give me satisfaction?"

The stranger penned his reply: "I am at your service."

Morton wrote again: "Who will be your second?"

The stranger rejoined: "I am too generous to seek an advantage, and too brave to fear any on the part of others, therefore I never need the aid of a second."

Morton penned: "Name your terms."

The stranger traced, without a moment's hesitation: "Time, sunset; this evening; place, the left bank of the Colorado, opposite Austin; weapons, rifles; and distance, a hundred yards. Do not fall to be time!"

He then took three steps across the floor, and disappeared through the window as he had entered.

"What!" exclaimed Judge Webb, "it is possible Colonel Morton, that you intend to fight that man? He is a mute, if not a positive maniac. Such a meeting I fear will sadly tarnish the lustre of your laurels."

"You are mistaken," replied Morton with a smile; "that mute is a hero, whose fame stands in the records of a dozen battles, and half as many bloody duels. Besides he is the favorite ensary and bosom friend of Houston. If I have the good fortune to kill him, I think it will tempt the President to restore his vow against venturing any more on the field of honor."

"You know the man then. Who is he? Who is he?" asked twenty voices together.

"Deaf Smith," answered Morton, coolly.

"Why, no, that cannot be. Deaf Smith was slain at San Jacinto," remarked Judge Webb.

"There, again your honor is mistaken," said Morton. "The story of Smith's death was a mere fiction, got up by Houston to save the life of his favorite from sworn vengeance of certain Texans, on whose conduct he had acted as a spy. I followed the artifice twelve months since."

"If what you say be true, you are a madman yourself!" exclaimed Webb.

"Deaf Smith was never known to miss his mark. He has often brought down ravens in their most rapid flight, and killed Comanches and Mexicans at a distance of two hundred and fifty yards."

"Say no more," answered Col. Morton, in tones of deep determination; "the thing is already settled. I have already agreed to meet him. There can be no disgrace in falling before such a shot, and if I succeed, my triumph will confer the greater glory!"

Such was the general habit of thought and feeling prevalent throughout Texas at this period.

Towards evening a vast crowd assembled at the place appointed to witness the hostile meeting, and so great was

How a Bride and Bridegroom Appeared in 1770.

To begin with the lady--Her locks were strained upward over an immense cushion that sat like an incubus on her head, and plastered over with pomatum and then sprinkled with a shower of white powder. The height of this tower was somewhat over a foot. One single white rosebud lay on its top, like an eagle in a haystack. Over her neck and bosom was folded a lace handkerchief, fastened in front with a bosom pin rather larger than a copper cent, containing her grandfather's miniature set in virgin gold. Her airy form was braided up in a satin dress, the sleeves as tight as the natural skin of the arm, with a waist formed by a bodice, worn outside, whence the skirts flowed off, and were distended at the top by an ample hoop. Shoes of white kid, with peaked toes, and heels of two or three inches elevation, enclosed her feet and glittered with spangles, as her little pedic members peeped curiously out. Now for the swain. His hair was sleeked back and plentifully bedewed, while his queue projected like a handle to a skillet. His coat was a sky-blue silk lined with yellow; his long vest of satin, embroidered with gold lace; his breeches of the same material, and tied with a waist formed by a bodice, worn outside, whence the skirts flowed off, and were distended at the top by an ample hoop.
