Speech of C. R. Buckalew in the Senate of Pennsylvania, Monday Evening, March 27, 1871.

Agreeably to order the Senate resumed the third reading and consideration of an act for the further regulation of boroughs.

Mr. BUCKALEW, being entitled to the floor, said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak upon this bill I desire to make a single observation of an introductory character.

Other objects were impeded to me, I have been told, by the presence of a rival and ambition—but that imputation was wholly false. I thought, sir, that the attention of the representatives of the people assembled in the Legislature should be directed to some fundamental and searching changes in our electoral system.

Now, sir, in the first place, I propose to refer to the bill which has been passed in this State upon this subject of reform in the direction of the jury system.

rior to all others that engage the public mind. After a time they get strength enough to hold the balance of power between the two parties.

The Whig party in State after State was seduced into a similar sort of alliance subsequently, until it became utterly debauched and eventually gave up its own organization and took a creed in which this balance-of-power party

There was one other point of objection to the bill which I have referred to, and that was the fact that it would have had the effect of increasing the number of members of the town council
