Poetical.

For The Columbian On the Piazza.

BY TILLIE LAUBACH. ome Calvert on the plazza, Walked long with Annie Lee, Assuring her, in sweetest cadence, Of his love and constancy,

Handsome Calvert new is frowning.-

"Beautiful, poor girl, farewell," Cheeks grow pale, and pulses quiver

On the plazza maidens merry Seek for Annie everywhere,- Handsome Calvert reads a musice As be paces his room alone,— Bitterly he laments the fortune Which his scheme so near had won, Annie Lee's proud heart is breaking, But since Calvert proved unworthy, Aunic Lee is his no more.

He gathered a rose from the garden wall, Where in royal splendor it grew; Lading with sweetness the balmy air, And fresh with the evening dew, And when the moon from her eastern tower

Shed softly her dangerous light, the placed the rose in my trembling hand, As a parting gift that night. O swiftly, sweetly the moments fled,

Till vanished that evening hour, And naught but the spell of the past rema Save my beautiful faded flower. O withered rose ! even in thy death,

I know not it ever we'll meet again The future, oh who can disclose? Still will I treasure through life what he go My faded yet beautiful rose.

THE BOX TUNNEL. BY CHARLES READE, The 10.15 train glided from Paddington, May 7, 1847. In the left compart ment of a certain first-class carriage were four passengers; of these, two were worth description. The lady had a smooth, white, delicate brow, strongly marked eyebrows, long lashes, eyes that seemed to change color, and a good white as milk. A man could not see her nose for her eyes and mouth, her own sex could and would have told us more nonsense about it. She wore an unpretending gayish dress, buttoned to the throat, with lozenge-shaped buttons, and a Scotch shawl that agreeably evad ed the responsibility of color. She was like a duck, so tight her plain feathers fitted her; and there she sat, smooth hand and a soupcon of her snowy wrist just visible as she held it. Her opposite neighbor was what I call a good since he belonged to a corporation that and black as a coal. " Done! Done!" Now I am sorry a man I have hitherto praised should have lent himself, even in a whisper, to such a speculation: but

"nobody is wise at all hours," not even when the clock is striking five-andtwenty; and you are to consider his profession, his good looks, and the temptation,—ten to three. After Slough the party was reduce to three: at Twyford one lady dropped her handkerchief; Captain Dolignan like a lamb; two or three words were pen thrusts and wood-ents. Valor and beauty deigned to laugh at some inflated humbug or other punctured by Punch. Now laughing together thaws so devoted as Captain Dolignan,-he handed them out,-he souped them,he tough-chickened them, -he brandled and cochinealed* one, and he brandled and burt-sugared the other; on their into the inner compartment to inspect a him ill, - and he, alone, must not dauce her. certain gentleman's seat on that side with her, speak to her. ## rivalry of the engine-this time! Death Among Politicians. The New York correspondent of the

Rochester Democrat writes: "The recent death of Valandigham calls my attention to the remarkable exception which it forms to that of other departed political leaders. It is indeed worthy of notice that this class of men have lived to an old age or to its near approach, and that they have seldom been removed by violence. On this account Mr. Valandigham's case attracts particular notice. His death and that of Peter Cagger are among the rare instances of the death of political leaders by accident. The death of A. P. Upshur, Secretary of the Navy, by the bursting of the big gun aboard the Princeton, in 1843, is the parallel; but he was not a political leader. The Revolutionary patriot of Massachusets, James Otis, who made Fancuil Hall ring with his eloquence, died by a stroke of lightning. Lincoln was slain by an assassin, and was the only one of our Presidents who died by violence. To these may be added the inferior name of Hiscock, whose fate while a member of the Constitutional Convention is fresh in the memory of our readers. Webster, while in Albany in 1845, was on the point of taking passage for New York in the steamer Swallow, which was wrecked near Hudson, and had he done so he might have been among other victims. Among the short lived politicians, the most distinguished was Hugh S. Legare, the bright star of Tyler's Cabinet, who died at Boston in 1842. He was only forty six, and had served as United States Attorney for less than two years, but had won eminence in that time. Of our statesmen, Clay reached the age of seventyfive; Jackson, seventy eight; Calhoun, sixty-eight; Webster, seventy; John Quincy Adams, eighty-one; Buchanan, seventy-eight; Van Buren, eighty-one; Tyler, sixty-four; Cass, eighty-two; Marcy was seventy-one, and Edward Everet, the same; Benton was seventysix, and remarkably, Webster, Calhoun, Cass and Van Buren were born the same year-1782. Going back to men of older date, John Adams saw his ninety-first year, Jefferson his eightythird, both dying on the fourth of July, 1826. Burr lived to eighty-one, which was a striking contrast with his accestors, for his father was forty-two at the time of his death, and his grandfather, Jonathan Edwards, was only fifty-six. Monroe lived to seventy-three, John Jay to eighty-four, Patrick Henry to sixty-three. We thus learn that our politicians, notwithstanding their cares ns, enjoy an e beyond the average, and that the carly death of such men as Legare and Henry J. Raymond forms the exception. Nepotism Thirty Years Age. On the third day of March, 1841, Mr. Martin Van Buren, about to terminate his career as President, called upon change of civilities, requested to be in elinations, like, his father's are for the point him," "Is that all?" said Mr.
