Miscellaneous. The First Snow Fall.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. The snow had begun in the morning. And to-day all night it had been falling.

Every pine, and fir, and hemlock. Wore ermine too dear for an earl. And the poorest toad on the slim tree. Was ridged thick with white.

From sheds new roofed with carraza. Came Chanticleer's muffled cry. The soft rain was softened to snow. And still fluttered down the sky.

I stood and watched by the window The noiseful work of the sky; The snow that had been so long. Like brown leaves whirling by.

I thought of a mound in sweet Autumn. Where a little headstone stood; And the sudden thrush of snowbirds. As did robins the lakes in the wood.

Up spoke our own little Mabel. Saying, "Father, who makes it snow?" And I told of the good old Father. Who cares for us here below.

Again I looked at the snow fall. And thought of the laden sky. That arched over our first grave row. When that mound was heaped so high.

I remembered the gradual parting. That fell from that cloudless sky. Flute by flute, heaving and hiding. The seat of our deep-voiced cry.

And again to the child's whisper. The snow that had been so long. Baring the Merciful Father. Alone can make it fall.

Then, with a kiss that saw not. I kissed her. The snow that had been so long. With my kiss was given to her sister. Folded close under deepening snow.

Miscellaneous. A STRANGE AND THRILLING STORY. The night shadows were beginning to settle down upon the earth.

All day the rain had been falling, sometimes in heavy showers; the roses and plinks in the garden heard sickly look for the petals hung low and were heavy with water, and with mud which had splashed upon them.

The clouds were still dark and threatening, bespeaking a stormy night. The little town of Ashton was unusually quiet. The streets were too muddy and the weather too inclement to entice people from their homes.

Only now and then a solitary traveler was to be seen. These business had driven forth; and they walked with rapid steps, anxious to again get under shelter.

In a vine covered cottage on a flower sprinkled lawn the supper had been waiting over an hour for the master of the house, whose business had necessitated his being absent from home all day.

Mr. Jacobs was the tax collector. His travels were to be seen. These business had driven forth; and they walked with rapid steps, anxious to again get under shelter.
