Sunshine and Shadow. BY BAVES.

Two children played on the kitchen floor, They laughed and they crowed in their childish giec.

The sunshine came through the open door, The children caught at the shining stream.

As though they had found a golden toy, nough for thom that the passing beam, Had filled their little hearts with joy, The mother watched them in their play, A prayer rose up in her loving heart,

'Oh! far, far off may be the day, When with my children I must part."
Also! how little do we know, Of joy or sorrow yet to come

The sunbeams come and quickly go, And leave but slandows on our leave On Jenny first the shadow fell,

They bore her from her home away. The little mound is left to tell, Her feet among the shadows stay. A year of mingled light and shade Around the mother's heart is thrown A surbeam was the child that sand,

A shadow for the one that's gone.

The light to darkness still gave place, For dark, more dark the shedows grow, Envolving in their cold embrace, The form of little Perry too, They laid him by his sister's side,

Where golden sunbe ama never con'e, With tears, 'twould be a sin to hide, Returned to find a childless home. And yet through all this gloom there breaks,

Bloss Him who gives, bless Him who takes, As in His wisdom seemeth best, "Let little children come to me,"
"I'll bear them to my blessed home,

From every sin and sorrow free, Where blasting shadows never come, his here at last we find the light,

TESTIMONY AT THE RIGHT TIME.

The case pending before our Court interested the people deeply. A few months before Jacob Ames had died, leaving property to the amount of fifty or sixty thousand dollars, all of which was readily available. At first it was supposed that the old man-he was eighty-seven-had died without having made will, as he had often been heard to remark that making a will seemed like a preparation for death, and as theze could be no question about the inheritance of his property, he did not choose to make any such, to him, ghostly testament. His direct and only legitimate heirs were two orphaus, both girls, children of his only daughter. One of them was a cripple, requiring almost the undivided care and attention of joy and kindness cast its gracious all who knew them. While peop! were feeling glad that the orphan sisters were to be thus grandly provided for, a man named James Arnold pre-Ames, made several years before. last witness was about to leave the witness stand; and this witness was Thomas Cloudman, the servant just alluded to. He had been questioned by a juryman, and had made a plain statement. Everything was against the poor, deserving orphans, and all in favor of the despised nephew. In fact, no honest man, under the evidence, could have the person who voted for me ?" brought in a verdict against Arnold's

The jury man who had questioned this witness sat at the end of the box; and close to him, among the spectators, stood old Harvy Goodrich, who was at that time engaged in the paper mill of Day & Lyon, at Portland. I had known him years before, when he worked for Rice, of Newport. The juror held the will in his hand, open, and Goodrich cast his eye upon it. I saw the old paper-maker start and tremble. "Let me look at that!" I heard him whisper, for I stood close by.

The juror, without considering, handd him the document; and before the counsel could interpose and regain it Goodrich had seen all he desired, and his first movement, after relinquishing the will, was to hasten to the side of the orphan's attorney, and whisper, hurriedly and excitedly, in his ear. I saw the attorney, whose name was Shipman, bend his head attentively, and then start to his feet. What was it?
