"No one so well," replied my companion

"What was it?" asked the girl with a slight tremor

"Nothing but a rusty axle," he replied

"As for the girl, she clambered down the steep path

"And the miller slept not at all, but paced up and down his room

"The next day, the miller and his son sat on the bench in the sun

"The young girl, who, standing trembling within, had heard the words that had passed

"The miller, who, standing trembling within, had heard the words that had passed

One hand, protruding forth, grasped a curious necklace of small shells

"The voice of my companion died away like the whispering of wind among the trees

"Some days afterward a man, prompted by curiosity, crept to the edge of the ridge and looked down at the mill

"There was a deep sigh, but whether it was caused by the moaning of the breeze through the branches of the oak, or exhaled from a human breast, I could not tell
