KEYSTONE CARRIAGE WORKS!

The following interesting facts are translated from Prince's "Salm-Salm's" "Recollections of Mexico":

Although the Mexicans are a lazy people, they rise early—the gentlemen to take their morning ride, the ladies to go to early mass, which is the only occasion on which they appear in the streets on foot. They take a luncheon between twelve and one o'clock. The Mexicans are a very temperate people; they drink little brandy, wine or beer, but a very table you find pulque, a light, vinous beverage resembling cider, obtained from the American agave. As a general thing they lead very regular, exemplary lives, but gambling is their passion.

The men are usually small, delicately but symmetrically made, and have very small hands and feet. They are very polite and graceful, reserved and cautious, as though they were always on their guard against deception—and for a very good reason, since trustworthiness is far from being a leading virtue among them. They are ready to promise—with words; are always at your service, but they are not to be trusted. Fifty years of civil strife would be sufficient to demoralize better people than the descendants of Cortez and his followers. They love money, but have little idea how to use it, and are generally miserably poor.

They are honest, but they are not to be trusted. Fifty years of civil strife would be sufficient to demoralize better people than the descendants of Cortez and his followers. They love money, but have little idea how to use it, and are generally miserably poor.
