Remarks of Judge Elwell, at the Normal School Meeting, September 6, 1875.

The meeting having been fully organized, in pursuance to a call by Judge Elwell spoke as follows:

"It is well known to you all, citizens, the calamity which befall this town on Saturday afternoon—a calamity more severe than almost any other that ever happened to this community."

"One of the most flourishing institutions of the Commonwealth has met with disaster by fire; and we are convened this morning for the purpose, so far as practicable, as possible, to overcome the difficulties that are caused by reason of that calamity; and, in order to do that, it is necessary that the citizens of this town (inasmuch as they are each and every one interested in the property of this institution) that the citizens should take measures immediately to make such provisions for students as will enable them to remain and the school to continue."

"We have yet remaining the original school building—the one which a large part of the scholars can be taught. But the boarding hall and the dormitories are destroyed, and there is an immediate necessity therefore, and one that calls together this meeting, that of making provision for these students so that that important part of carrying on the institution may be provided for, and suitable boarding rooms for the scholars."

"The school started off with excellent prospects for the present term—better than at any time since its organization. It has been gradually under the present administration, on the increase in favor of the community. Its reputation extends far and wide. It has become not only a great attraction but an indispensable necessity. It must not be allowed, for one moment, although so great a calamity has befallen it, to be stayed in its course. And it is upon the citizens now that rest and every one interested in the property of this institution, that the citizens should take measures immediately to make such provisions for students as will enable them to remain and the school to continue."
