We have in former articles described number of substances that are demanded in order that a soil may be constituted. But other substances must be present, or a soil is not complete. These must be present from natural sources, or be added, or there will be no fertility in a field. The several substances that have been described, and especially sand and clay, are absolutely demanded. But a field that contains nothing but mineral, or earthy substances, is not capable of profitable cultivation. Those materials which have been described, are distinguished as inorganie, or mineral substances. Without a soil, or a mixture of inorganic and organic materials, or foods, no kind of crop can be successfully cultivated. It is true that some of the essential materials father. It was a beautiful, nay, a grand for promoting the growth of plants are derived from the atmosphere, or from other sources than the soil from which plants grow. The most abundant of these substances are carbonic acid and ammonia. A large part of some of these are furnished by the processes of nature, and cost nothing.

In order to the formation of a soil, there must be a due proportion of organic matter in it; nor is it a matter of indifference as to the special properties of this organic matter. In some of the primitive fields, there is often an abundant supply, and sometimes a superabundance of these materials. These are derived from the decay of grasses or vegetables that have grown from them, which have been deposited from the growth and decay of these for many successive years. Such fields may not require any of the manures or fertilizers for a succession of years, and the time when enriching materials will be demanded, may be greatly prolonged by care in the arrangements of suc-

When the influence of these organic substances have been exhausted, recourse must necessarily be had to art for a supply of the deficiency.

this supply, is by the use of farm yard manure, or by some substitute for them.

When the matter is carefully examined, it is found that but a limited range of chemical substances are demanded in order to supply this place. The material, the supply of which demands as much attention as any ed by the application of farm-yard manure, as well as by several other substances that are used as fertilizers, some of which are sold at a high price. Although they may bear a high price, it is sometimes a measure of economy to purchase and use them, especially upon fields that have become exhausted, and in localities where the products of the farm bear a high price. The chief question to be solved is, will the application of a certain ferlilizer, to a certain field, and for a certain crop pay for the outlay? It is of a field; and this is to be determined by ascertaining what foods for the crop that is to be raised, it already contains.

That a field is not capable of producing one crop, is not a certain indication that it will not raise some other, for each crop has its own special demands. It is therefore important that the chemical demands of able outlay .- Prairie Farmer.

Horses should be watered from a brook, pond or river, and should not be allowed to drink from wells or springs, as the well water is hard and cold, while the running stream is soft and rather warm. The preference of horses is for the soft, even though it be muddy water. Horses should be allowed in summer time at least four waterings day, and a half a bucket full at a time, and to cross, and soon his triumphal shouts anin winter a pail full may be allowed morning and evening, which is sufficient to assuage their thirst without causing them to pull up or bloat. Young Folks.

For Boys.

There is a nice little story about a Boston ov who threw a ball through a window, and on went housetly to the owner of the house onfessed what he had done, and gave him his father's address. It is well to circulate good stories like this, as they frequently stimulate other boys to go and do likewise. A Danbury boy who had read this story was throwing stones at a dog in White Street when a missile missed its aim and flew through a four dollar pane of glass. The first impulse of the boy was to lift his feet and depart from that neighborhood with vehemence, but the experience of the Boston boy suddenty came to him, and with it the glow of pleasure he had felt in perusing it, and he made up his mind at once that he would go to the man, tell him what he had done, and give him the name of his and inspiring scene, this little pale-face but honest-eyed boy humbley but firmly confessing the wrong to the deeply affected merchant. That evening the manly youth returned home. As he opened the door to pass in, he felt himself suddenty grasped by the collar and lifted in the air, and then dropped down again with a swiftness that starlted him. And then the voice of his father pealed forth, "Break windows, will ye?" another jerk-"destroy people's property hey?"—cuffing him under the ear—"and then go an' tell 'em who did it, yon vag-

So the duck flew at the hen; but as she did so, her wing struck an old goose, who stood close by "I'll pay you for that!" cried the goose and she flew at the duck; but, as she did so The most natural and common source of her foot tore the fur of a cat, who was just then in the yard. "I'll pay you for that !" cried the cat, and she flew at the goose; but as she did so, her tail brushed the eyes of a sheep, who was near. "I'll pay you for that!" cried the sheep, and he ran at the cat; but, as he did so, his foot hit the foot of a dog, who lay in the sun. "I'll pay in the whole range, is ammonia. "I'll pay you for that!" cried she, and ran at the dog: but, as she did so, her horns grazed the skin of a horse, who stood by a tree. "I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he ran at the cow. What a run there was! The horse flew at the cow; and the cow at the dog, and the dog at the cat, and the cat at the goose, and the goose at the duck and the duck at the hen. What a noise they made, to be sure! ',Hi, hi! Ayer's Hair Vigor, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed; but such as remain can be saved by this application, and stimulated into activity, so that a new growth of hair is produced. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. The restoration of vitality it gives to the scalp arrests and prevents the formation of dandruff, which is often so uncleanly and offensive. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injuto the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a HAIR DRESSING, nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich, glossy lustre, and a grateful perfume.
