Culture of Celery.

The demand for this delicions regetable increases yearly, and it behooves our garmers to pay close attention to its culture if they desire to receive the highest market price for their crop. Pure, white, unspotted stalks are required by consumers, for if they become rusted the quality of the celery is injured. Fresh, crisp, firm, snowy stalks of a large size, are always sought af-

Various are the decisions concerning the preference for ridge or trench culture, but whichever course is pursued, rich soil is very essential. If the plants are spindling and in the course of his examination, how he weak now, they will not produce fine large could discover a fool,-"By the questions he stalks; but a judicious use of liquid manure | would ask," was the prompt and highly sugwill greatly increase their size. A solution gestive reply. of guano water is the best stimulant, unless barnyard liquid can be more readily obtain-Dissolve one large iron spoonful of guano to each gallon of water, and apply twice a week. Native guano, gathered from cast lots to see who shall be considered the the hennery, will also afford a good substitute. Dissolve one pint of hen manure in They cast lots: the negro cast lots of stones, three gallons of water, and let it stand in and the ostrich cast lots of feathers. Then the sun for two or three days; water with it the former went about his business, which twice a week.

These stimulants are more desirable for the culture of celery in small gardens than for market gardening. They could not easily en the growth and increase the size of a few

Many amateur gardners make a mistake in earthing up the stalks too early, before the plant has obtained a vigorous growth, and thus the roots are buried too deeply for their health In most climates, the first or middle of October is soon enough to begin to goes, the other cannot stand still." blanch celery for winter use, and by that time the stalks are large and firm, Great care must be taken not to cover the crowns, i, e, the tenderest sprouts with sand or earth. Use the hand rather than the hoe or trowel while placing the earth around the stalks. and select a dry day for the work. It is the dampness of the soil when applied which tremently causes rust to attack the stalks In two weeks earth up, or fill in again.

Celery is now considered a desirable se dative for nervous complaints, and also a good digester of other dishes. At any rate, it is a very delicious addition to dinners or suppers, and with the expenditure of a little care and trouble can be raised as readily by the amateur as the market gardener .- Country Gentlemen.

Pasturing Meadows.

A paragraph is traveling quite extensively through our agricultural exchanges, recommending pasturing meadows as a means of making them more productive. It gives the name of a practical farmer who has tried it, ud is sure he knows that pasturing is the preferable practice. All of which shows that there are exceptions to all rules. It is possible that under some circumstances pasturing meadows may be really beneficial : but it by no means follows that it is to be generally recommended. For the great majority of meadows pasturing at any season is undoubtedly injurious. The roots both of clover and timothy are very liable to injury by the tramping of cattle at any season. Cropping the herbage diminishes the vigor of the plant. If fed down in spring, it will usually be impossible to get more than half "I yawned through the whole of your a crop. If fed closely after having, the nat- speech." ural shelter of the plant and roots for winter is destroyed. The exception to this is where blue grass or red top completely occupy the soil. Their fine roots are scarcely injured when the ground is dry, and the removal of surplus grass leaves the surface more open to the warm sunshine of early spring. The intense cold of winter on a dry soil will not injure the roots of such a meadow, and there is a positive advantage in having the ground clear and open to the warmth and light of

How much clover is injured by close pas turing may be seen by watching the bad effect which a wagon track has made across the field. The crowns of the clover roots will be found broken down, and the plants made about as feeble and stunted a growth as corn plants would under similar circum stances. The hoof of a horse or cow is little l ss destructive to clover wherever it touches. Of course, rich full fed cattle will wander but little and the injury will be less; but whoever expects to get the best result from having his fields seeded with clover should see to it that stock of any kind is kept out of them, and that the crop is allowed to obtain nearly its full growth before cutting .-

Breeding Fowls.

When it can be done, mate the best twoyear-old hens with a fine, large, vigorous cock, one-year-old. Where pullets are used in breeding they should be mated with a cock two years old. A hen's first laying for the season will always give the best chicks. She is then more vigorous than after laying a long while. There is more vitality and thrift in the earlier than in the late hatched chicks. Owing to the great strength and vigor of the hen when she first begins to lay, there is more vitality in the germ from which the chick starts, and it is characterized by a greater robustness all through the period of growth and development; therefore, hatch early. When the chicks are old do not come up to the mark should be cullmore room for the good ones. A beginner on and outgrow some apparent defect, but, he will make slow progress in breeding.

ing spit .- Exchange.

Manuring Trees. A writer in the Indiana Farmer says that strong, fresh manure is not usually so good for fruit trees as good clean cultivation without it; and that peaches and apples grown with manure are less sound and have a poor er flavor. When the same degree of vigor can be imparted to the trees with cultivation alone, the fruit is better for it. This statement reminds us of the remark made many years ago by W. A. Underhill, brother of Dr. Underhill, of Croton Point, (whilely known to grape growers,) that in his own vineyard he used no manure, but cultivated once a week till the grapes had formed; and that these grapes were better ripened and sweeter than those in the doctor's vineyard where manure was used and less cultivation given .- Country Gentleman.

SHEEP.—The cheapest and best insurance of bells. The sheep dog is a great coward gravely sought to remove her arms from his when in pursuit of mischief, and he wants neck. no noise-no alarm. Bells bought at wholesale do not cost much. SOME OF THE MARVELOUS THINGS TO BE SEEN AT THE SHOW.

Few persons have an adequate idea of the vast assortment of wonderful articles, all suggestive of great and patriotic events, that will be on exhibition at the centennial curiosity shop. Aside from the original batchet with which George Washington cut down his father's cherry tree and the chair in which the Father of his Country would have sat if he had accepted Judge Jones' invitation to dinner, there will be:

The birch which the grandfather of his country cut with which to "wallop" the father of the same if he had not owned up. The lie that Washington couldn't tell about the cherry tree.

The entire garden which contained the cherry tree showing the stump of the tree. Section of the Delaware river where it was crossed by Washington. Hole from which Israel Putnam pulled the wolf at Pomfret.

Ear-trumpets used by General Braddock and other guests at Braddock's Denf-eat. Demijohn containing some of the spirits f '76.

Horse on which Paul Revere rode from Boston to Lexington. Chest of tea which was not thrown overboard in Boston Bay.

Corn from the surrender of Cornwallis. All of these curiosities, with others too numerous to mention, may be seen at the Centennial for the small sum of half a dollar .- Chicago Times.

A Practical Husband.

He was a wonderfully-practical man, says the Danbury News, and she was marvelously poetical. To her life had been a dream edged with gold and filled in with the loveliness of roseate hues. But to him had appeared verything in the home-spun garb of enough to show what they will be, all that every-day life. He is a country merchant and buys his goods in New York. The yield was at the rate of 200 bushes of car corn per acre, while the fodder crop was immense and of the quality.

We could have sold the entire crop for a big price to a New York seedsman, but declined to do so, preferring to keep the crop for the accommodation of our numerous country patrons, who will find it to their interests to secure at least a small selection of this are variety for the coming spring planting Live agriculturisis, who believe in "procurity" will a small routent (cultivators are poor things,) both ways between the rows will be astonided by the result.
