It required some diplomacy to creep observation when I led my visitor into the house, but I invented an errand that sent Marjorie to my room just as the carriage drove up.

Stephen was accompanied by his cousin, and my first look into his handsome face convinced me that memory was busy at finding himself in Marjorie's house. I gave him a greeting to Stephen before I drew Arnold Halcomb into the library. I searched for the words that would tell him of my debt to Marjorie, of my confidence in me, and my plan, of which I was sure to be sure she was totally ignorant.

"What good news does Stephen bring that makes my little girl so radiant?" she asked.

"I put my arms about her, and holding her fast, I said, almost sobbing in my eagerness: 'Marjorie, since the day you lifted me from poverty and suffering to other happiness, I have never ceased to pray that at some time I might be permitted to bring some brightness to you.'

"Dear child, every hour you are with me, and you pray for me, I said, lovingly. 'But I never hoped, I said, that I could bring you such glad tidings as I have now.'

"To me?" she cried, her sweet face glowing pale.

"Of Arnold Halcomb," I said softly; "of his true, unchanging love for you; of his faithful devotion to the one deep affection of his life; of Marjorie, of Marjorie, of his presence here-to-day to tell you this himself."

"Here? Arnold here?"

"I answered, still releasing her, plunging down stairs, rushing up on patient Stephen in the drawing room, and executing a gasp for his benefit that certainly would have admitted me to any lunatic asylum in the country. Then I pulled him down, and in whispers, told him about it, laughing and crying, till he declared I would wind up with a fit of hysterics.

"But I didn't," I said as proper and prettily as possible when Marjorie came in, leaving upon Arnold Halcomb's arm, with every lurking shadow of a smile, her face by the good luck of heaven, while he, erect and proud, looking as a man does who gains the supreme desire of his heart after years of waiting.

If ever true, fervent thanksgiving ascended from a grateful happy heart, I am sure it rose from Marjorie's on that November day when Arnold came to her.

We had a double wedding in January and Stephen carried me to his London home; but we made frequent holidays to the lovely home where Marjorie gives us a cordial welcome, and where, I am sure, she has the consolation I dreamed to leave all swept away in the happiness of her husband's presence and devoted love.

One of the most remarkable fictions ever accepted by the people is that of the Wandering Jew. His basis rests upon a false interpretation of the words of Scripture: 'There are some of them standing here who shall not taste death until they see the Son of Man coming in his Kingdom.'

The belief of many that this prophecy was literally fulfilled in the person of a Jew who was wandering over the earth, and was to continue to wander till the end of time. The first mention of the mystical personage, who states that in 1298 an Archbishop of Greater Armenia having visited the Abbey of St. Albans while on a pilgrimage to the shrines of England, was asked whether he had ever heard or seen of a certain Joseph, who was present when our Lord suffered, who spoke to him and was still alive, wandering upon the face of the earth. A knight in his retinue answering, said that his lord well knew the man, that he had eaten at the Archbishop's table, and was often seen and conversed with by him. The Archbishop went on to relate that as the Jews were dragging our Lord to the crucifixion, he, one of the porters in the service of Philip, struck him, saying in mockery, 'Quicker; why do you loiter?' And Christ, looking back on him with a stern countenance, said, 'I am going, and you will wait until I return.' As our Lord had said, Cataphrigus is still waiting his death. He was, at the time of our Lord's death, thirty years of age, and when he comes to the age of one hundred he returns to the same age he was when Christ suffered. After the ascension of our Lord, Cataphrigus was baptised by Ananias and was named Joseph. He dwelt in Armenia and other Eastern countries passing his time with the prelates of the Church, a man of holy conversation, of few words and discreet behavior, never speaking except to Bishops and religious, and relating the events which took place when our Lord died, and in the lives of the Apostles.

The next mention of the Wandering Jew we find in 1595 in Bohemia, where a poor weaver named Kokot, in great perplexity to find a treasure hidden by his grandfather some sixty years before, was shown by the Jew where to find it, he having been present when it was hidden. About the same time, mention is made of the mysterious personage in the East, but the most circumstantial account of him is that given by Dr. Paul von Etzen, afterwards Bishop of Schleswig, who says that in 1547 "he observed a tall man with his hair hanging over his shoulders, standing before the pulpit, during the service of the Holy Communion, and when the
