

The Ruins of Carthage. Mr. W. E. Robertson writes from Blenheim, Scotland, to the London Times as follows: Having recently visited this once famous city, I have thought that it might be interesting to your readers to know something of the present condition of its ruins...

Without a Soul. M. le Docteur Bussy d'Alembert a noel French surgeon and physician, has long held that life might be prolonged indefinitely in some cases of patients; such, for instance, as those who have suffered no fatal lesions, or who are perishing from anæmia or the degeneration and non production of proper blood corpuscles. Until the 9th day of last November he found no one willing to accept as true his seemingly visionary theory, but having secured a suitable patient for experimental purposes in the person of M. Nathan Isaacs, a near relative, by the name of Baron Rothschild, he immediately proceeded to demonstrate the truth of his theory...
