His Chief Creditor.

A ROMANCE OF BLOOMSBURG.

The custom which fashionable Englishmen have of flying to the coast of France when debts and the like mishaps render their own country somewhat too hot to hold them comfortably causes Boulogne and other towns forming the chief places of rendezvous on such occasions to present for the most part a strange assorted society, and to witness at times very curious scenes.

Sir George Tindal was a young baronet of good English family, who went to Boulogne some years ago under rather peculiar circumstances. He had been left very young with command of a good patrimonial estate, but had given way so far to the fashionable follies of the young in high life as to allow nearly the whole of it to fly away on the turf as fast as race-horses could carry it.

He had still good expectations, however. A maternal relative—a merchant and one of the richest in the metropolis—was likely, in the due course of things, to leave Sir George his fortune, as his nearest heir. He was fond of the young man, but had been greatly and perilously alienated by the conduct and reverses of the latter. It was while meditating on this subject that an idea struck the nearly ruined baronet.

"How successful," thought he, "my uncle has been by his speculations in the funds! Might not I have a chance that way also? I might not lose my poor remains of means into the great lottery and pull out a prize! I may as well try it; that I have now is scarcely worth thinking twice about. I shall try at least."

Poor Sir George. He forgot that, though some seas may be deep, there are others which cannot be sounded at all; that however deep one may be in the mire there is a chance of getting deeper. He did venture his all in the stocks. He was successful once, and twice.

Getting inspiration by his good fortune, he thought he had but to venture further and win more! Alas! he was a novice merely in the hands of veteran gamblers. Some of the very worst members of the body who speculate in these matters got him into their hands, and knowing well what his expectations were, and where they lay, they led him on by a nibble or two, until by a series of ruses, considered not infamous only on such a field of transaction, they at length got him placed under a load of debt which even all his uncle's means would with difficulty lighten.

Holding him bound by signatures and bonds, they then waited coolly for his accession to his prospective inheritance, knowing well that the same prospect would keep their victim all within reach of their grasp at any time.

Sir George wandered about town for some months after these mishaps, like a man with a rope around his neck. During the time he had many reasonings with himself on an important point. The point affected his whole prospective fortune.

The young baronet was naturally possessed of good sense; he was well educated, and it may be said that his heart was good, and his intentions fair toward all men under ordinary circumstances; but his course of life and the associations he had formed had relaxed his moral principles. This acquired debility came now into play. The point which he canvassed with himself was, whether or no, after having most distinctly ascertained that he had been the dupes of his creditors, his engagements with them were binding upon him. His good sense said yes; for they acted within the law; his sense of honor said the same, for they had his bonds; "but then," said the other internal arguer, "they got these by base means, and they have not lost a shilling by me. The article experience was what my folly bought from them at the price of a fair fortune, and with it I can pay out of their pockets. Besides, if I pay these harpies I shall be beggared."

The end of the whole was that the uncle of Sir George died; the young baronet was left heir; and within a few hours almost after being put in possession of his fortune—which was the portable one of an old moneyed baronet—the young baronet was on his way with it to Boulogne. The creditors stormed and vowed revenge; but at first they knew not whether he might fly—and there are great difficulties attending the recovery of money from creditors on the continent in any case.

Sir George fixed himself in a small country house near Boulogne. He had been able to carry thither a sufficiency for permanent maintenance—about twenty thousand pounds—nearly the amount of his funded embarrassments, after what he called "fair debts" were privately settled.

He lived for some time in great seclusion, only occasionally appearing in public. The society which he met was not of a character to trouble itself much about what he had done, or was doing, or was about to do so long as he maintained a fashionable appearance and a gentlemanly deportment.

So Sir George led a very quiet and undisturbed existence for a time—always excepting some little twinges from a sense of violated honor—until one day the universal busy-body came in the way to overthrow the runaway's repose.

A lady made her appearance in Boulogne, bearing the name and style of the Baroness d'Estival. Report said she was an Englishwoman by birth, and the widow of a foreign noble; and she was young, beautiful and reputed rich.

Ever long such attractions brought all the dangers of dangling Boulogne into subjection to the baroness; and among the rest our baronet saw and admired the lady. For a time, however, he was undistinguished by her, nor did he make any marked advances on his part.

An accident brought around an acquaintance. By a peculiar piece of awkwardness, as it seemed on the part of her servant, the outside of the baroness was nearly overturned near St. George's door.

The young baronet sprang out, and as the lady seemed faint and terrified, he entered and sought to support her. She complied. It was the hour of lunch—and they lunched together. Sir George begged her to view his garden—and they walked together.

When the lady was at last about to depart, Sir George begged leave to take the reins out of the hands of the awkward servant and escort her home in person.

The result of all was, that the baronet became an established visitor of the baroness; and having declared his passion, received an answer which left him much to hope, while at the same time it promised nothing positive.

Sir George could not be long acquainted with the fair baroness without discovering that she had one remarkable and somewhat eccentric taste; she was distinguished fond of angling—a perfect female Walton.

VEGETINE.

Purifies the Blood, Renovates and Invigorates the Whole System.

ITS MEDICAL QUALITIES ARE ALTERNATIVE, TONIC, SOLVENT AND DIURETIC.

VEGETINE is made exclusively from the juices of carefully-selected herbs, roots, and berries, and so strongly medicated that it will effectually cleanse the system every state of Scrofula, Syphilis, Humors, Cancer, Gout, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Female Weakness, Leucorrhoea, arising from Indigestion, and various diseases and ailments, which, if neglected, are apt to become chronic and incurable. It is a powerful solvent, and its action is purely natural, and it is perfectly safe in all cases.

For Ulcers and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, such as Scrofula, Boils, Tetter, Scald-head, Ringworm, etc., Vegetine has never failed to effect a permanent cure. For Pains in the Back, Kidney Complaints, Dropsy, Female Weakness, Leucorrhoea, arising from Indigestion, and various diseases and ailments, which, if neglected, are apt to become chronic and incurable. It is a powerful solvent, and its action is purely natural, and it is perfectly safe in all cases.

The remarkable cures effected by Vegetine have induced many physicians and apothecaries whom we know to prescribe and use it in their own families. Vegetine is the best remedy yet discovered for the above diseases, and is the only reliable blood-purifier yet placed before the public.

THE BEST EVIDENCE. The following letter from Rev. E. S. Best, Pastor of M. Church, Natick, Mass., will read with interest by many physicians. Also, those who suffer from the same disease as afflicted the son of the Rev. E. S. Best, will find in the following evidence no doubt about the curative powers of Vegetine.

Dear Sir:—We have good reason for regarding you as one of the greatest benefactors of our race. I feel assured that it has been the means of saving the last two years of his suffering years of age. For the last two years he has been suffering from a disease which, if neglected, would have been fatal. A consultation of the best physicians in the country has failed to effect a cure. I have, however, been using your Vegetine, and in ten days he has recovered his health, and is now as well as ever. I feel that I have no other words to say but that I am, Sir, your most grateful and obedient servant.

At length a slight shower fell, and the baroness asked her lover to enter a small, rude cabin, where a glass of wine and cakes were offered to him.

Here the pair sat, hour after hour, the lady enchanting her lover with talk that caused him to forget all but her present self. At length he pulled out his watch and started up.

"What!" cried he, "the day has advanced and I don't think they have ever put about!"

The wind, too, was blowing nearly direct from the coast.

"Come madam, if you fish at all to-day, it is surely time to begin."

The answer startled the poor baronet.

"I have angled," said she, quietly; "and what is more, I have caught my fish!"

"What fish have you caught?"

"Twenty thousand pounds!" answered the lady with coolness.

Sir George grew pale, and stepped hurriedly on deck.

"Distraction!" cried he, as soon as he had looked around.

"Put about instantly, pilot! This is Margaret—we are off, England!"

"Exactly so, Sir George," said the lady at his back.

He turned and looked at her.

"Your purpose, then, is to take me—"

"To London, Sir George," said the lady, interrupting him with calmness, though a grained flush was on her cheek. Sir George turned to the sailors.

"My purse," said he; "twenty-five louis for you, if you put back for Boulogne!"

"Twenty-five louis!" said the lady, disdainfully; "when twenty thousand pounds are in the other scale!"

"Barbarous, treacherous woman!" cried the infuriated baronet, as he looked round with an eye that threatened peril to all, if he had but the means to inflict it; but the baroness gave a signal, and in an instant his arms were placed to his side by two pair of brawny arms.
