HER HOLIDAY

Yes, it was to be her holiday-'all for her. Nobody else was to have any share in it except myself-that is, if going as her courier, to say. paymaster and general factotum, could be called having a share in a holiday.

We had been married nearly ten years training of numerous olivebranches, she had my own.' . never had any chance of a rest. Of course, we had been to the seaside frequently, and to do as she pleased with; if she pleased to all that sort of thing ; but then , surrounded by children and nurses, these trips had only been a continuation of the general London responsibilities, plus the worries and inconvenience of lodgings or hotels. Moreover, within the last few years there had been ome trouble in her family, which had acted | bid in it, unlike her. Yet there was no aphigh-strung nature. 'Why, it is like a honeymoon over again,' she said; 'or, rather, it is as if there had been no break, and that it was only the continuation of those early days.' We spent hours and hours upon the lake, beneath the awnings of the flat-bottomed boats, those first inceptions of the gondola, convent or sanctuary of the Madonna del dane errand. Sasso, set like a jewel amid the blue hills be-the boundless panorama of slp, plain and pealing of the deep-toned organ resounded through the choir.

We selected Locarno as a halting place, because it was at that time, and is so partly still, out of the rush of the tourist. A primitive place, with simple, civil people, willing to serve and oblige honestly, and without wing for the first angetion in their minds What shall we get by it?' Thus we came o know some of them living up there near the sanctuary, and to speak or nod when we met from time to time.

Notably among these was a mother and child-a sweet little chubby cherub of a boy about 4. The Italian folk in the North there are not as a rule handsome, but this mother was an exception, and the child was like her. Superior, too, in all respects, she looked better born, bred and nurtured; nay there was even a look of culture and refine-

His family never knew of the narriage; he had intended, she said, to proclaim it, and face the consequences of the nesalliance, as it would be called; but his sudden end prevented this, and to this day she believed her existence even unknown to her husband's people. But she did not care he had left her just enough to live upon, and she had come to dwell at Locarno, where her aged father lived, and whose last days she desired to soothe. She was contented with the humble life she led there in yonder little vooden chalet-at least until the good God should take him to his rest. Would we enter the abode and speak to man, a native of Tuscany, who had seen Pullman Palace Cars better days. It mattered little that, or why

What, had he taken an English name? No, not an English name; her husband had been naturalized as an Italian, had changed his name for reasons—they did not signify, and he was known as Giorgio Vianero; she was Lucia.

Of course, we went in and spoke to the old farmer-like man, who, partially paralyzed, always sat by the window of his neat little house. He received us with the grace of a prince, regretted that his infirmities prevented him from doing the honors of the neighborhood, so beautiful as it was,

I bent over and looked down in the direction the little one was pointing, and to the river beheld lying prostrate thirty feet below, the motionless form of the mother. Then ensued a scene which I will not dwell upon. I flew up the sanctuary for assistance. My wife, clasping the little one in her arms, hastened down to the place where it was just possible by a very rough scramble to get round to the bed of the river. Here in the dark as to what she was driving I and those whom I had brought with me, presently joined her, and we made our way to the luckless woman. She was not dead, le and care we managed to carry her up to particularly would lose no opportunity her home, my wife with Paolo in her arms guess what I am thinking of? I need hardly say that under other cir-cumstances I should have entirely objected to her assuming such maternal responsibilities; I should have pointed out that it past times had struck terror to the foes of was no duty of hers, a well born lady, in did I; for this was the name of my wife Her father even had considered it wise to unknown peasant woman, and that there family sorrow referred to at the starting. were plenty of neighbors willing and ready to undertake the task, and who were really the proper people, etc.

Many of these Columbia county men were among the first in the field and the last out, and in every place did credit to themselves and the County. The Regiment was at first under General Henry M. Naglee, and was in the following engagements, viz: Lee's Mills, Bottom's Bridge, and a four days' fight on the advance to Richmond, Fair Oaks, Mechanicsville, and the line of the Chickahominy. In December, 1862, it was sent to North Carolina, in January, 1863, to Port Royal in South Carolina, and went through an arduous campaign. They made the assault on Fort Johnson, and a detachment of the 52d on the 18th February, 1865,
