Poetical.

LORD ULLIN'S DAUGHTER AND THE OIL CITY DERRICK.

A chieftain, in the Highlands bound, 'Twas on a Friday morn'g, do not tarry!

And fast before her father's men Three days we've not together.

It is not for your silver bride, But for your silver bride!

By this the storm grew loud and hoarse, The water-wind was shrieking.

But still she would not leave the derrick, And she would not leave the derrick!

For she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

Select Story.

ONLY A FARMER. BY MARY GRACE HALPINE.

Quite an interested and anxious group had gathered in Mrs. Wilson's dressing room.

It was a pleasant morning in June. It consisted of Mrs. Wilson and her three unmarried daughters.

It has always been an interesting subject, and to the maternal element, attended with considerable anxiety.

The contents of the various wardrobes had been laid out and examined.

It is not for your silver bride, But for your silver bride!

By this the storm grew loud and hoarse, The water-wind was shrieking.

But still she would not leave the derrick, And she would not leave the derrick!

For she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

And she was true as steel, And she was true as steel!

Doctor Blazer.

He was no kind of doctor for an alms-house, anyhow, said the steward, referring to the late resident physician of the institution.

He had the qualifications. 'How do you mean?'

'Why, he'd get interested in a novel or something else maybe, and he'd sit there in his room and never get near the paupers.'

And when I'd ask him if he wasn't going to see the sick ones to-day, he'd look up and say:

'I'm not very well myself, this morning, Jones; suppose you just step over and put mustard plasters on the entire institution.'

'So I'd have to be a doctor, you know, and I'd plaster up the whole crowd sick and well, and pretty soon you could hear those paupers howling worse than a menagerie, and see 'em hopping about as if they were dancing plumed obelisks.'

But they had to bear it. Doctor's orders, you know; and there he'd sit, and read, and read, and read, until he found if the heroine got married or not; if the plasters couldn't come off until he said so.

'As he always thought of it, 'A wife has to take the position of her husband, which is something that you had better think of.'

'I've thought of it, and very happy thoughts they were, too, and very happy thoughts they were, too.'

'The financial disasters of the three years that followed made quite a change in the surroundings of all the above, with the exception of Josie and her husband.'

Out of the wreck of Mr. Wilson's business nothing was left but the honor and integrity which shone all the more brightly from the temporary gloom that shrouded him.

His wife took their altered fortunes very hard, and fairly fretting and worrying herself into the grave, where she was laid a few months ago.

Her husband, however, was not so easily broken. He was a man of a high and noble character, and he was glad to accept positions, one as conductor on a city car, the other a third-rate clerkship.

Josie does not see much of her sisters, but many a barrel of apples and crock of butter find their way to them from the Manning farm.

Almost every pleasant afternoon a gray-haired, placid-looking old man can be seen on the Western piazza of the farm house, frequently with a grandchild on either knee.

It is Mr. Wilson, who often thanks God that one of his daughters married "only a farmer."
