A FLIRT PUNISHED.

PROLOGUE. Scene, a lady and gentlemen. Seated in the orchestra.

"Where do you live, ma'am?" said the gentleman. "In the garret of the old Phoenix Hotel, sir."

"How long has your husband been addicted to drink?" asked the gentleman's wife.

"About three years," replied the lady. "Madame," rejoined the generous editor.

"I am truly sorry for you, and of course shall bestow upon you such charity as I think you will relate your misfortunes."

"I am a beggar, with these children depending on my success for a living."

"I beseech you, in behalf of my poor little children, to bestow upon me such charity as you feel disposed to give."

"Her story was told and met a kind response from a generous heart."

"Madame," said the lady, "what was your maiden name?"

"Ellen Dupree," replied the lady.

"Oh! Ellen, have you come to this?" said the poor woman.

"I think I have known you in time, but I can't remember your name."

"My name was my name when I knew you," replied Miss Dupree.

"My God! Who is your husband?" asked the poor woman.

"The poor woman remembered being introduced, before her marriage, to Mr. Williams, and she remembered, too, how coolly and indifferently she treated him at that occasion."

"Young ladies, if you marry an industrious and intelligent young man, and become wealthy in your old age, do well, but if you marry a vain, foppish dandy, of the non compos mentis order, and should be brought from affluence in youth to beggary in old age, you do worse."

"Remember, that ladies, and make the proper improvement."

Ghost-Stricken Schaykili. It is only on rare occasions that the people of Schaykili county take any stock in ghost stories.

"Now and then you may come across one that is respectable; but they are few and far between."

"I do not consider him a Franklin or a Blackstone either, but I do think him a very intelligent and handsome young man, and worthy of any young lady's attention, and I expect to treat him as such."

"Now, Miss Dupree, I think you ought to reflect upon what you are saying, and have some regard for my feelings."

"Well, I don't think I shall ever come to be the wife of a printer, or any body who has to labor; nor do I intend to countenance such."

"Miss Crossman remained silent for some time, while her face reddened with indignation."
